House Whips Claim 15-Vote Edge to Kill Arms Ban

Repeal a Gamble, Hiram Johnson Says; Lindbergh's Talk Again Assailed

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer.

Constant polling of House neutrality sentiment by the House Democratic whip organization has developed a "minimum majority" of 15 votes in that chamber for repeal of the arms embargo, it was learned last night.

One organization spokesman said the check to date justified minimum estimates of a "15 to 20" House majority for repeal, leaving doubtful votes out of the count and without tallying expected Republican switches.

"We believe that recruits from the so-called doubtful members and even from Republican ranks will more than double that minimum figure and give us a majority of from 35 to 40 for repeal," said this member.

House In Spotlight

Attention was focused on the House, as the Senate, with a repeal majority already conceded by most leaders of the opposition, prepared to conclude general debate on the bill and start voting on amendments.

With Senate debate rounding its third week, Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, Senate isolationist leader, summed up the opposition case against repeal, and neutrality bill supporters in a series of short speeches hastened to the rebuttal. Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was charged with fomenting ill feeling between the United States and Canada in his recent radio address.

In checking House sentiment for repeal, leaders used last summer's vote for the Vorys limited embargo amendment as a working base. The Vorys embargo plan was adopted by a vote of 214 to 173, a majority of 41. To change that result and repeal the embargo, the Administration must obtain 21 switched votes, or the equivalent. Additional support is being canvassed from the 47 absentees on the last vote.

100 Believed Undecided

The canvass to date, it was said, has uncovered the needed number of switches, plus the 15 minimum margin in favor of the bill. Democrats only have been approached in the poll. Leaders said they had heard, but could not verify, a report that last session's Republican vote of 7 for repeal would be stepped up to 20 on the next repeal test.

"I think they are guessing," said House Minority Leader Martin. "In my opinion there are about 100 House members who don't know how they will vote."

Meanwhile, it was learned that leaders have under consideration a plan to send the House and Senate bills to conference, rather than ask the House to concur flatly in the Senate changes. If that course is followed, the House repeal test probably would come on adoption of the conference report, instead of the Senate bill.

A charge that embargo repeal would put America "half in and half out of the war" and foreshadow complete involvement yesterday came from Senator Johnson.

The acid-tongued Californian, reliving the fight he led against American entry into the League of Nations two decades ago, called repeal a "gamble" on the Allies' winning, and declared the United States cannot "help one side defeat the other and yet escape the consequences of war."

Denounces Lindbergh Speech.

The second attack within a week on Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's proposal for British withdrawal from this hemisphere marked the day's colorful debate.

Senator Brown (Democrat), whose Michigan constituency lies adjacent to Canada, declared Lindbergh offered a "gratuitous insult" to Canada in virtually demanding in a recent radio speech that the

Broadcasters Face New Bolt On Free Speech

Others May Follow Elliott Roosevelt From Ranks of NAB

By James D. Secrest.

The resignation of Elliott Roosevelt from the National Association of Broadcasters yesterday brought to a head a row that has been brewing since the N. A. B. took steps to terminate paid broadcasts on controversial subjects.

While N. A. B. officials stood their ground in the face of the move, leaders in the industry expressed fear that the controversy may lead to enactment of legislation which will compel all stations to set aside a portion of their broadcasting time for free discussion of controversial issues.

The loss of ten Texas station members, which young Roosevelt said he will withdraw, appears likely to be overshadowed by a larger exodus next week-end when contracts between the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit Priest, and 44 stations expire. Many of these broadcasters have told N. A. B. they will withdraw rather than surrender the right of free speech and, incidentally, a lucrative commercial period.

Elliot Wories N. A. B.

Elliott Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, is likely to prove more of a thorn in the side of the N. A. B. code, however, than Father Coughlin, broadcasters believe, both because of his family connection and the fact that he is a news commentator rather than an exponent of a cause.

The only relation between the two public-radio figures, however, is the fact that both were caught in the same net after a committee representing 425 organized broadcasting stations decided to engage in self-regulation to offset stricter Government control or operation.

Neville Miller, president of N. A. B., in making public a letter from the Mutual Broadcasting System to the effect that Roosevelt will conform to the code hereafter in his network comments, denied the latter's charge that the code ruling constitutes "censorship in its worst form."

"We regret that Mr. Roosevelt has seen fit to disregard the code volun-

Hoover Urges Ban on Arms to Kill Civilians

Calls for Embargo On Poison Gas and Bombing Aircraft

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 20.—Former President Hoover declared tonight that the time had come for America to take a clear and explicit stand on wars against civilians, and that "whatever else may be done about the embargo, America should not sell bombing planes, their bombs, poison gas or submarines."

In an address prepared for an N. B. C. network, Mr. Hoover gave his reasons for his proposal ten days ago of a substitute for either repeal of the embargo or no repeal—a proposal "that in what we do, we seek for a firm basis in broad humanity."

He said his speech was designed partly to "clear up a misimpression" as to his stand on the question of this country's selling arms.

Would Sell Defense Arms

His proposal, he said, was that this country prohibit the sale of the weapons used to terrorize and attack civilians — bombing planes, their ammunition, poison gas and submarines—and sell the instruments, such as pursuit planes, light observation planes, antiaircraft guns and their ammunition, which can be used to defend civilian populations against such attacks.

"I proposed," he said, "that for the present we limit our arms business right there. . . .

"I wish to clear up a misapprehension as to this proposal. I have not proposed that we divide every kind of weapon used in war into defensive weapons and offensive weapons, nor that we embargo such offensive weapons and sell such defensive weapons on that basis.

"What I have proposed is to limit our basis of action first, to that part of war carried on against civilians, and second, that we confine our action to certain specific weapons which I have named."

Distinctions Not So Difficult

"I mention this," Mr. Hoover continued, "because some of the writers upon this proposal are under a misimpression that I have proposed to cover all kinds of war weapons. That wider field was indeed proposed by myself in 1912 and by Mr. Roosevelt in 1933. Starting from this misimpression, these writers

Five From Capital Area Win Prizes in Irish Sweepstakes

Five residents of metropolitan Washington shared yesterday in cash awards in the Irish Sweepstakes. Three ticketholders will receive about $3,800 apiece, while the other two will split an equal amount.

Slices of the $2,469,750 plum pudding went to Mrs. Maggie J. Thompson, 72, retired Government employe, of 1328 G street southeast, and C. P. Fletcher, 70, contractor, of 640 K street northwest, joint holders of a ticket; Raymond Agar, Treasury Department engineer, of 208 Massachusetts avenue northeast; George Wilber, 1345 Florida avenue northwest, and Mrs. Elsie A. Allen, 21 Rosecrest avenue, Alexandria, Va.

Approximately $1,314,645 went to 347 in the United States in the first day's draw, the Associated Press reported.

Overjoyed at her good fortune, Mrs. Thompson said she intended to travel "all over the United States."

She retired from the Federal service seven years ago after 40 years with the Treasury Department.

Fletcher, from whom Mrs. Thompson bought a half-ticket, declared he had "been playing the sweepstakes for several years," but added, "this is the first time I've won anything."

Agar, a structural engineer working at the City Postoffice, said he felt a "little numb" when he first learned the news. "Many people have said their first reaction to a telegram is to expect bad news and I opened it in that state of mind," he said.

Mrs. Allen, informed by phone that her ticket had been drawn,

Army Plans To Form 9 Fast Corps

Would Regroup Regulars and Guard In Quick-Striking Force of 600,000

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Reorganization of the Army to form nine hard-hitting mobile corps is planned by the War Department under an expansion of the military establishment to be asked of Congress this winter.

Officials said that plans had been put before President Roosevelt to enlarge the Regular Army to 280,000 men, and the National Guard to 320,000, and that if these increases were approved, nine corps of more than 40,000 men each would be set up. They in turn, will form four field armies, more than existed during the World War, when all units had many more men but less fire-power.

Major world producers of chromium and tungsten, metals required in the manufacture of steel alloys for warships and tanks, the same day balked efforts of the United States to lay in a reserve of the essential materials for possible war needs.

No foreign bids were received on chromium and only Chinese and Cuban producers of tungsten offered to sell their wares to the United States, an opening of bids at the Treasury Department revealed.

South and East Africa, Turkey, New Caledonia, and the Philippines, major sources of chromium, and Chile, Argentina, Bolivia, South Africa and the Federated Malay States, tungsten producers, failed to bid, apparently because of higher prices expected from warring nations.

Russia was the principal foreign bidder Thursday when the Government opened bids on manganese ore, essential in the manufacture of steel, but American trade sources say the Soviet offer was ringed with "impossible" conditions.

Other Defense Plans Pressed

The Government's efforts to purchase these metals are made under a $100,000,000 authorization of the last Congress to stock up essential war materials which are not produced in sufficient quantities in the United States and therefore might be difficult to obtain if this Nation were at war.

Meanwhile the War Department carried forward its program to ready the Army for any emergency by two other moves. They were:

Formation of the Alaskan National Guard with the establishment of two infantry companies with a total strength of about 400 men. Officials said the action was taken in response to a joint memorial of the Alaskan Legislature.

Movement of troops South for large-scale war games this winter has already begun, the concentration date for the units having been advanced by several weeks. All except a few troops of the First Division will eat Thanksgiving dinner on the Southern drill grounds, officers stated.

President Roosevelt recently indicated that War Department plans for an army of 600,000 men were generally in line with Administration policy and military circles look for him to ask for the 93,000 additional Regulars and 85,000 additional Guardsmen in January. Under the Army's reorganization plan based on this increase, one "streamlined" Regular division and two larger

Surface Ships May Escape U-Boat Ban

Roosevelt, Asked If He Will Treat Them Alike, Says They Are Not

By T. F. Reynolds,
United Press Staff Writer.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Oct. 20.—President Roosevelt today drew a sharp line of differentiation between surface fighting ships such as those with which Great Britain controls the seas and submarines on which Germany is basing its hope of smashing the British blockade.

He gave direct indication that his proclamation outlawing undersea craft within 3 miles of America's coastlines probably will not apply to surface vessels.

Mr. Roosevelt's differentiation between submersibles and surface vessels would apply to British and German warships alike. But in practical effect, his assignment of surface fighters to a category different from submarines would have little effect on the "pocket battleships" of Nazi Germany, which would be unlikely to apear in American waters unless the British blockade is broken.

He mentioned neither Britain nor Germany by name.

Neutrality Act Draws Line

Arriving at his Hyde Park home for a week-end holiday, Mr. Roosevelt was asked at a press conference about the basis on which his submarine proclamation differentiated between undersea craft and surface vessels. He replied he was not responsible for the differentiation—that the line of demarcation was drawn in the neutrality law.

He was asked whether there was any possibility that restrictions similar to those on submarines might be placed on surface craft. His proclamation, issued earlier this week, barred operations of belligerent submarines in territorial waters of the United States, and specified that submersibles could enter our waters only if "acts of God" compelled them to seek refuge from natural forces.

Mr. Roosevelt declined to answer the question directly. Submarines and surface vessels, he said, are in two different categories. He said he does not consider the two categories analogous, and told correspondents there is an essential difference between submersibles and ships that fight on the surface. To try to consider them on the same basis, he said, would be similar to adding apples and pears. You can't apply the same rules to apples that you can to pears, he said.

Sets Up Double Limit

In discussing his submarine proclamation, Mr. Roosevelt set up a double limit for territorial waters—a 3-mile limit within which belligerent submarines may not operate and a 300-mile limit within which the American neutrality patrol operates.

He emphasized, however, that limits of territorial waters are flexible and that the United States might consider its territorial waters to extend as far as 1,000 miles from its coast line. The final criterion, he said, is national safety. Territorial limits, he said, extend as far as necessary for national safety, according to the specific case involving national security and neutrality.

Arbitrary limits predicated on some premise of international law are not binding, the President said. In other words, it would be silly to try to establish a definite 3-mile limit, or a 20 or a 1,000-mile limit, he said, emphasizing the ultimate

Berlin Proclaims War To Finish; Britain Fears Great Air Raids

London, Oct. 20.—German reconnaissance machines scouting over the Firth of Forth this morning set air-raid sirens wailing in Edinburgh and towns of that area all the way up to Dundee. Antiaircraft guns went into action and R. A. F. interceptor planes took off, but the German planes flew away before contact was made.

The sirens were first sounded at 11 o'clock and the all clear was sounded an hour later. However, a few minutes after the all clear signal an unidentified plane appeared over the Firth and the sirens were sounded again. A second all clear was given at 1:30 p. m.

Air Defenses Criticized

Air ministry details were meager but there has been much criticism of the defense arrangements following last Monday's raid on Rosyth in the same area when no warning was given the populace, although shrapnel fell in the Edinburgh streets. No explanation of this failure has yet been given.

At the same time, the fact that today's planes were identified as scouters lead some of the more nervous to speculate as to whether the visit should not be regarded as a preliminary to another raid such as the one which took place Monday.

There is general belief here that all of the raids on the fleet in the northern firths, both on Rosyth and on Scapa Flow, have been mainly in the nature of experiment so far and there is bound to be a certain amount of tenseness while the British wait for the Germans to try a real raid with a hundred or more bombers sent over in waves. Under the circumstances it is being asked if the scouting is not preliminary to a big raid.

Antiair Craft Success

For some time the British have felt cheerful over the way in which the antiaircraft crews have functioned. Most of these units were territorials before mobilization, corresponding to the National Guard in the United States. In the first test, regular army officers say, these men who did most of their training evenings and week-ends and in the short summer camp period, acquitted themselves well. There was one case of an antiaircraft battery in action which was organized only last spring.

[King George VI today visited London's famed balloon barrage sites, where he was shown a new secret in connection with the nation's new air defense method, the Associated Press reported. One of the R. A. F.'s high-ranking officers was quoted as having told His Majesty that any raiding planes that might attempt to penetrate the balloon barrage would encounter a "very unpleasant surprise."—Editor's note.]

Finland Hails Moral Support From America

Helsinki Delegation Will Leave Tonight With Reply to Soviet

By A. Marcus Tollet
Copyright by New York Times.

Helsinki, Finland, Oct. 20.—A long meeting of the Finnish cabinet was held today immediately after the return of Foreign Minister Eljas Erkko from the Scandanavian four-power conference at Stockholm.

After the meeting Erkko prepared instructions for Dr. Juho Paasikivi, who is to leave for Moscow with the rest of the Finnish delegation tomorrow night.

See Position Strengthened

No change in the composition of the delegation is expected but there is likely to be an additional member, who, it is rumored, will be V. A. Tanner, the Finnish finance minister.

The Finn-Russian talks are expected to last two or three days. The foreign office disclaims any knowledge concerning rumors from foreign sources about Russia being annoyed over the delayed return of the delegation.

An official spokesman said tonight, "The Stockholm conference and the moral support of the United States and the 20 American republics has strengthened the Finnish position."

Collaboration Improved

All newspapers, irrespective of party, comment favorably today on the result of the Stockholm conference. There seems to be no doubt here that the meeting of the heads of the northern states has served to invigorate and deepen collaboration among these countries for preserving neutrality.

The Scandinavian countries have solved the problem of establishing a pact for a free peace alliance, the value of which is not lessened by the absence of mutual assistance clauses. Even though the communique issued after the conference was cautiously framed, it shows an unflinching resolve to guard the policy which the northern states declared.

'Gauntlet Picked Up Where Allies Threw It Down,' Declares DNB Statement

By International News Service

Berlin, Oct. 20.—Official German sources tonight coupled condemnation of what they termed the "war-inciting" Anglo-French-Turkish pact with the declaration that Britain and France "have flung down the gauntlet and Germany has picked it up" for a war to the finish on the Western Front.

Despite evidences of a lingering Nazi hope that some last-minute peace move by neutrals might materialize, the official news agency, DNB, denied foreign reports that German overtures for a separate truce with France might be sent to Paris shortly.

The agency said it was "absurd" to interpret the "matter-of-fact" German army communique, stating Nazi troops had stopped short of the French border after recovering German soil, as indicating Hitler planned any peace suggestions to Paris.

Gauntlet Picked Up

DNB said: "The situation does not require any further clarification. Britain and France have rejected the Fuehrer's outstretched hand of peace. They have flung down the gauntlet and Germany has picked it up."

Nevertheless, the prospect of neutral diplomatic intercession before the German war machine is unleashed in full force was not entirely overlooked by qualified German circles. These quarters, however, insisted Hitler would make no further move himself in that direction.

They stressed that the voluntary restraint thus far of German troops and planes from crossing the French border did not mean Germany would initiate any new peace offer, but hinted that they were preparing for a "total war" unless neutral diplomatic behind-the-scenes activities create some fresh situation.

Balkans Called "Compromised"

Meanwhile, as Hitler weighed measures to counter-balance the newly gained Allied strategic advantages in the Mediterranean-Balkan area, the German foreign office, through its journalistic mouthpiece, warned that the Balkan nations have become "compromised" and may be transformed into "theaters of war," due to the Anglo-French-Turkish alliance.

While Hitler closeted himself with Ambassador Franz von Papen in a conference which lasted several hours, the foreign office organ, Diplomatic-Political Correspondence, came out with the first official reaction to the signing yesterday of the new Mediterranean treaty.

It reflected the German government's view that the pact places Turkey in a position comparable to that of Poland before the Germans invaded that country; that it directly jeopardizes the Black Sea interests of Soviet Russia and the Mediterranean interests of Italy, and that the British and French hope to bring the European war to the East.

Questions for Turkey

[Von Papen is expected to return to Ankara in a few days with questions to be answered by the Turkish government, the United Press said.—Editor's note.]

In the midst of this anger over the Anglo-French Mediterranean coup, a disposition was discerned in favor of new moves toward bringing about an armistice.

Two signposts seemed to point the way. One was an emphatic assertion in official German circles that Nazi troops on the Western Front have so far scrupulously refrained, under orders, from setting foot on

Byrd's Pepped Up Pemmican Like Something Mother Baked

By the Associated Press

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 20.—A Massachusetts Institute of Technology scientist said today he had packed a new energy wallop into the pemmican of Admiral Byrd's Antarctic explorers—and made the old Indian trail food as tasty as something mother used to bake.

Back from recent explorations through the cook book, Dr. Robert S. Harris reported he had developed a new formula, giving more calories per ounce of the concentrated heman's ration than anything in that line that has yet hit the trail in polar regions.

The new pemmican—3 tons of which will be shipped for the admiral and his men on their coming Antarctic trek—has the further advantage, Harris said, of being precooked, and of having a "nicer flavor" than previous trail dishes eaten by the adventurers.

Boosting the caloric content, the scientist explained, came from using a higher ratio of fat in preparing the 20-ingredient mixture from materials ranging from barley and beef to hydrogenated fat and onions.

In the old days, Indians made pemmican by adding fats to dried meats of the buffalo and the caribou. Later, scientists developed pemmican foods containing beef, fats, sugar, cereals and vegetables.

"The pemmican tastes like roast beef," said Harris, who said that the needs of the men on the trail were outlined for him by Dr. Paul Siple, one of the base leaders of the expedition.

Make League Work, Plea of Col. Hurban

Russia and U. S. Will Fail, Dr. Eddy Tells Legislative Bureau

An American policy during the war leading toward greater social justice at home and participation in more just international relations after the war was sketched by a dozen speakers last night at a dinner of the Independent Legislative Bureau at the Cosmos Club.

Col. Vladimir Hurban, Ambassador from Czecho-Slovakia, keynoted a meeting of Senators, Congressmen, educators, publicists, jurists and diplomats, at which Dr. Sherwood Eddy, author and lecturer, was the principal speaker.

Favors Reborn League

"The big problems that face the world today can be solved only from the point of view of universality," said Col. Hurban. "That is our one big aim; I do not say that the League of Nations has failed, for we must try and try again until we make it work."

"Even if Great Britain and France win this war," said the Czecho-Slovakian Minister, "it will do no good if collective security does not follow, for we will again face more wars and utter misery for all mankind."

Through her 20 years of freedom Czecho-Slovakia defended herself against communism not by police action but by social legislation, Col. Hurban declared, and Senator Hill (Democrat), of Alabama, underlined the moral that "America must meet her problems today by moving forward to an economic and social justice that we haven't even dreamed of yet."

Dr. Eddy in a discussion of recent European history developed the view that "in the Soviet Union is a great experiment based upon justice without liberty, and in the United States a great experiment based upon liberty without justice, and I do not think either will survive." Economic justice must be united with civil liberty for democracy to survive, he said.

Foreign Policy Criticized

Senor Don Luis Quintanilla, counselor of the Mexican Embassy, praised the good-neighbor policy in an off-the-record speech, and Barnet Nover, foreign affairs commentator for The Post, criticized the view that "we'll stay out of the war" is an adequate basis for foreign policy. Comparing it to the British and French policy of the last eight years, he declared that if America adopts a determined policy and sticks to it there will be no need to get in the war.

San Francisco Fair Heads File Bankruptcy Plea

San Francisco, Oct. 20 (INS).—With the close of the San Francisco World's Fair imminent, directors tonight issued this statement:

"In anticipation of liquidating its affairs following the close of the exposition October 29, the exposition has filed a petition with the United States District Court for assistance to the end that an orderly and equitable liquidation may be carried out."

The petition was filed under the new section 11 of the Federal bankruptcy act, which allows an extension of time to pay debts.

U. S. Launches Four Destroyers Sans Fanfare

Boston, Oct. 20 (AP).—Four new destroyers were launched at the Boston Navy Yard today without the traditional smashing of bottled champagne across their prows.

Only naval officers and civilian employes of the yard witnessed the launching, which consisted simply of admitting water to the huge drydock where the vessels were built.

The destroyers bore the names of men who proved themselves heroes or otherwise brought renown to the Navy—O'Brien, Walke, Lansdale and Madison.

The O'Brien honors five men, Capt. Jeremiah O'Brien and his four brothers, credited with the first capture of an enemy ship (a British craft) by the American Nation, in the harbor at Machias, Me., shortly after the Battle of Lexington.

dominion sever her link with England.

"I condemn his (Lindbergh's) remarks because they lend encouragement to the spirit of nationalistic imperialism that has cursed the world for centuries and which is the potent poison that has killed peace," shouted Brown. "I would have the world know that he did not speak for America."

Brown's criticism of the flier followed a series of Democratic leadership attacks last Saturday on Lindbergh's proposal for retaining the embargo on "offensive arms."

Lundeen Views Scored

Late yesterday Senator Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota, also was accused of deserting his "peace" platform by advocating United States seizure of the British West Indies. Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, told the Senate he was "amazed and chagrined" to hear from Lundeen a suggestion that would certainly "lead into war."

As general debate neared its close, under an informal understanding between Administration and opposition leaders, the Senate prepared to start action on the bill. Tentatively, Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, was scheduled to speak today. If he fails to, and there are no other speeches, Majority Leader Barkley said, "we will start laying down amendments for action" today. At latest, leaders hope to start consideration of amendments on Monday.

Other developments:

It was learned that Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, was considering presentation of amendments removing the requirement that title be transferred to belligerent purchasers before goods could be shipped on American vessels to outlying belligerent territories. Connally will insist on title transfers where American goods are transported on belligerent vessels, but thinks the requirement should not apply where American vessels transport the cargo.

Confirm Report in The Post

Study was being given to special protection for American vessels already en route to belligerent ports when the ban on such movement takes effect with bill passage. Action to permit such vessels to complete their voyage may be taken administratively by the President and Justice Department, or left to remedial action when the bill goes to conference, it was indicated.

Chairman Pittman, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, confirmed recent reports in The Post that legislation to compensate American ship owners whose vessels are tied up by the bill's shipping restriction probably will be considered next session. Pittman predicted not more than 20 per cent of American ships would be out of operation at the outset. He forecast that many of these later will find trade route outlets.

As the third week of debate drew near its close, Administration bill strategists sent a series of repeal advocates into the forum in rebuttal of Johnson't argument that repeal meant "walking down the bloody path of war."

Denying American neutrality would be affected by the change, Brown, Lucas, Senator Barbour (Republican), of New Jersey; Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisianna, and Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, took the floor.

Face Facts, Barbour Urges

"To say this will get us into war," said Senator Barbour, lone Republican in the group, "is as senseless as to say that a grocer who sells for cash to the customers who can reach his store would incur the undying enmity of other would-be customers who, unable to reach his place of business because of bad roads, have to trade in some other town."

Barbour appealed to the Senate to "face the facts as they are" and realistically "take thought for our own safety and welfare" by supporting the bill.

Senator Ellender, who identified himself as a member of the "Pop Gun Corps" following up the "Big Guns" in the neutrality debate, declared no nation will be taken by surprise if Congress repeals the arms embargo as the "world was put on notice" of the Administration's program for repeal last January. Rather than involve America in war, Ellender declared the repeal bill builds "bulwarks of protection" against the causes of war.

Calls Hitler "Mad Dictator"

"What do we owe to this mad dictator, this insatiable despoiler of men and nations, this violator of treaties, that we must tread on tiptoe to spare him displeasure?" demanded the Louisiana Democrat and follower of Huey Long.

"Since when has it become necessary that we should consult with Hitler or with any foreign power before considering the wishes of our own people?"

At one point in the debate, Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, challenged Majority Leader Barkley to make public all details of the Idahoan's neutrality discussion with the President at the White House last summer.

Aroused by Barkley's statement Friday that he had heard Borah prophecy at the White House "that there would be no war in Europe during 1939," Borah said his White House discussion was "wholly disconnected with the question whether there would be war." Barkley said he could not reveal statements of President Roosevelt. Boarah said he would like to see "the entire conversation stated," and that "if all the facts were known that one prophet was as well off as the other."

In Brown's unexpected attack on Col. Lindbergh he particularly denounced the fliers' references to Canada. He said Lindbergh clearly meant that Canada "must cut the last tie between itself and the mother country" and implied as well that "we cannot permit Canada to give bases to English warships, that we cannot permit Canada to send its army abroad to fight in the British cause."

Challenges "Lone Eagle"

The Michigan Democrat said Lindbergh's "unasked advice" was not only an insult to a "sister nation" but was "based on a wholly erroneous concept of our continental American policy." And he charged the remarks tended "to arouse ill feeling between two nations that for over a century have dwelt in peace and given as fine an example of international good will as the world's history affords."

"I challenge the statements of Col. Lindburgh," said Brown. "He speaks with no authority whatsoever but his own. He does not represent the views of any considerable part of the American people."

Senator Johnson in his summation of the isolationist case against embargo repeal, charged that America's "gradual" entry into the last World War "in many ways parallels the contest that is on us today."

"Have we learned nothing by that war?" asked Johnson. "Have not our dead and maimed taught us anything?"

The Californian argued that retention of the embargo helps Germany only "in a negative way," but "in a positive way affects all alike."

British Seizure Of Mail Recalls World War Row

Hull Notified; Letters To Germany to Be Rerouted Through Italy

By the Associated Press

United States postal officials formally called the State Department's attention yesterday to Great Britain's action in stopping American mail addressed to Germany.

Secretary Hull began considering whether to make representations to Britain. He said the Government would preserve all its rights under international law and that he would give the question whatever attention it called for.

Postal officials said Thursday that the British, in searching ships for contraband, had taken American mail, censored it and then sent it back to this country.

Mail to Be Rerouted

It was announced here that mail to Germany would, in future, be routed through Italy to avoid a controversy and interference by Britain.

Yesterday's incident recalled an exchange of notes between the United States and Britain and France in the World War. Secretary of State Lansing told the British in January, 1916, that he did not admit their right to remove or censor mail carried by neutral vessels. Thereupon, Britain and France promised to refrain from seizing and confiscating "genuine correspondence."

Controversy Renewed

The controversey was renewed later in the year, however, when Lansing received reports that American mails were again being seized. Lansing pointed out that the traditional policy of the United States was to permit mails to go even to enemies of this country.

On the very day the United States entered the war, Lansing told the allies the United States reserved the right to press claims for unjustified losses suffered by American citizens because of detention of money orders or checks in seized mails.

Detroit, Oct. 20 (AP).—Ignoring previous rebuffs, two members of the State labor mediation board today joined in negotiations aimed at settlement of the "slow-down vs. speed-up" dispute between the C. I. O.-United Automobile Workers Union and the Chrysler Corporation.

Arthur E. Raab, chairman of the board, and A. C. Lappin, Detroit member, filed into the conference room despite a blunt statement by the corporation at Lansing yesterday that State mediation was unnecessary. R. J. Thomas, U. A. W.-C. I. O. president who joined the conferees, said "absolutely no progress has been made."

$5,000,000 Credits to Spur Cotton Exports

RFC Will Finance Store-Until-Paid Plan; Belligerents Excluded

By the Associated Press

In a new move to help American farmers regain their "fair share" of world cotton markets, the United States yesterday set up a $5,000,000 revolving fund to enable exporters to ship cotton to foreign countries temporarily short of dollar exchanges.

Under this program, exporters who belong to the Cotton Export Corporation can ship cotton to foreign countries and store it until buyers there are able to pay for it. In the meantime, the RFC will lend those exporters 80 per cent of the delivered value of the cotton. When the buyer pays for the cotton, the RFC will get its money back.

Ordinarily, and especially in war times, exporters do not ship cotton unless they are assured in advance that the importer is able to pay immediately.

To Meet War Risks

Officials explained that the new program was designed to eucourage exporters to ship cotton despite increased risks resulting from the war. The Government will assume the bulk of the credit risk.

The loan plan is the second important measure taken this year to expedite shipments of cotton. Late in July, the Agriculture Department set up an export subsidy program under which exporters were offered a bounty of 1½ cents a pound on raw cotton and equivalent payments on cotton products sold abroad.

Officials said exporters operating under the RFC loan program would be eligible for the export bounties.

The principal objective of these measures, officials explained, was to reduce a record surplus of about 14,000,000 bales of American cotton as well as to regain lost markets. The Government hopes to expand exports this season to more than 6,000,000 bales. Last year's volume of about 3,750,000 bales was the smallest since 1872.

Belligerents Excluded

The Cotton Export Corporation was described by RFC officials as a cooperative organization of 20 of the Nation's leading cotton exporters. C. W. Butler, of Memphis, is president.

Cotton shipped under the loan program would be limited to countries not involved in hostilities. Officials said that in addition to Great Britain, France, Germany and Poland, shipments to China and Japan were barred.

Col. Lee Leaves 'President's Own' For Office Duty

Lieut. Col. William F. Lee, commander of the "President's Own," yesterday was ordered detached from the unit—the Twelfth Infantry—and assigned to duty in the office of the Chief of Infantry at the War Department.

Command of Arlington Cantonment, the new Army post across the river in the shadow of Lee's mansion, falls to Maj. Willfred R. Higgins, temporarily, pending selection of a new commander for the Twelfth.

The regiment, formerly stationed at old Fort Washington, now abandoned by the Army, fills the position of a "palace guard" for the White House. It is the infantry element of the Washington Provisional Brigade.

Farragut's Ship To Be Moored Here

Admiral Farragut's flagship, the Hartford, which sailed through the torpedoes to glory at Mobile Bay in 1864, will be moored in the Anacostia River within sight of the Eleventh Street Bridge, the Navy announced yesterday.

Plans ultimately call for the ship and others found in American history to form a "floating museum" just above the Arlington Memorial Bridge, but meanwhile a berth is being made for it at the Navy Yard. An $18,184 contract was awarded to the Tidewater Construction Corporation yesterday to provide mooring facilities near the boundary of the yard.

Nazi Attache Likens Chicago Unit to U. S. Club in Berlin

Group Has Abandoned Uniforms, Organizer Tells Dies Committee

By John B. Oakes

An employe of the German consulate in Chicago yesterday told the Dies committee that an organization of German citizens which he heads is constructed on "exactly the same lines" as the American Club in Berlin.

Flatly denying his Association of German Nationals is anything more than a "social and fraternal" organization, Fritz Heberling, who does "routine secretarial work" at the consulate, said the society has "no connection" with Germany.

However, James J. Metcalf, who followed Heberling to the stand, said Heberling had told him that the German Bund, predecessor of the association, took all its orders from Adolf Hitler "and no one else."

Uniforms Abandoned

Entirely distinct from the German-American Bund headed by Fritz Kuhn, the German Bund was dissolved in 1937 after its uniforms and drills received unfavorable newspaper publicity in Chicago, Heberling testified. He added that the purposes of its successor, the Association of German Nationals, are "the same," but that such paraphernalia as uniforms has been abolished.

Earlier in the day, Fred Beal, now serving a North Carolina prison sentence growing out of the Gastonia textile strike of 1929, warned the committee that agents of the Soviet secret police are "liable to do some damage" to some of the anti-Communist witnesses who have testified.

Beal, former Communist organizer who after two trips to Russia became bitterly anti-Soviet, continued the narrative he began Wednesday before the committee. He said his second trip to Russia was made in 1931, while he was a fugitive from North Carolina.

Admits False Passport

Among Communist Party officials who persuaded him to return, he said, were William Z. Foster, party chairman, and Leon Josephson, whom he described as "an Ogpu man." Josephson was of the opinion, said Beal, "that they should have shot me over there before I came back."

The witness said that on his second trip he used the same false passport the Communist Party had obtained for his earlier one. Soviet officials knew the circumstances of his visit to Russia, Beal asserted.

"It seems to me that this ought to cause considerable concern down in the State Department about our future relations with Russia," observed Dies.

Beal said he worked in a tractor plant at Kharkov, but "conditions were so horrible it is difficult to explain them." He returned to the United States in 1933, he said, and more than four years later went back to North Carolina to begin serving his term. It is understood he now is seeking a pardon from Gov. Clyde Hoey, who permitted him to appear before the committee.

Orders From Hitler Aide

Heberling, speaking with a strong German accent, told the committee that all German citizens had been ordered to resign from the Friends of New Germany in cabled orders sent in 1935 to Rudolf Hess, Hitler's aide. The German Bund was set up immediately thereafter, he said, to include only German nationals.

Heberling said he served as head of the bund, which existed only in Chicago, but that it was dissolved late in 1937 after the German consul "called me down" as a result of unfavorable publicity it had received in the Chicago press.

The new organization, Association of German Nationals, which is led by Heberling, "has no relation whatsoever with the German-American bund" and received its funds from "no outside sources," he asserted.

It does not take part in the dissemination of propaganda, he said. In contrast to testimony given the committee by Fritz Kuhn, Heberling said he knew of only one possible case of discrimination against a German citizen because of his nationality. Most of the association's members, he said, are in skilled trades and practically all are employed.

Metcalf, former G-man now connected with the Farm Security Administration, said he was a member of the German Bund for two months in 1937, in order to investigate it.

"'There is something you must know before you join,'" Metcalf said Heberling told him, "'we are under one man only—Adolf Hitler.'" The witness quoted Heberling as saying the Bund had men who would "beat up" any spies found within the organization.

Columbia Lodge, No. 174, of the International Association of Machinists, informed The Post last night that the "high union official" reported to have informed the Dies committee of communist activity at Washington Navy Yard did not belong to the machinists' union.

Firm Fights Tax On Coster Loot

Attorneys for the trustee of McKesson & Robbins, Inc., yesterday challenged the right of the Collector of Internal Revenue to assess an additional $300,000 income tax, basing their opposition to the decision on the ground that the late F. Donald Coster had stolen the money upon which the assessment was made.

The Department of Justice announced that Federal agencies are examining data regarding the Coster estate to clear up the situation.

Winnie Porter Chosen Queen Of Halloween.

Tall Brunette, 18, Flashes Smile, Says: 'I'm Surprised'

From among 31 contestants, blondes, brunettes and a couple of redheads, too, tall, brunette Winnie Porter, 18, a Kentuckian until coming here a year ago, was chosen yesterday to reign as queen over Washington's Hallowe'en celebration. She was sponsored by the West End Citizens Association.

The Raleigh Hotel elevators poured the more than four score candidates for the title into the ballroom at 4:30 p. m., and at 7 p. m. the nine judges, aided by one certified public accountant, announced Miss Porter as winner.

In a powder-blue dress swarming over her ankles, with some tiny red flowers tucked under her throat and with a flash of a very big smile, Miss Porter, who is employed at the Park Lane Inn, said "I'm surprised; I didn't think I would win."

Miss Patricia Mayfield, 2129 Florida avenue, sponsored by the Alumnus Gamma XI of Pi Kappa fraternity, was chosen first lady in waiting. Miss Agnes Mills, 124 R street northwest, sponsored by the Hunter School of Fashion Modeling.

Comes Smiling Through

Miss Porter said she didn't know what costume she would wear at the coronation which will be held at the Raleigh the night of the thirtieth, nor what she would wear when overseeing the parade, with its marchers, bands, floats and strange inflated animal figures, Hallowe'en night.

She lives at 1900 F street and came smiling through the tedious two and a half-hour judging bee that kept the girls on their feet most of the time. The girls paraded before the judges and were chosen by number. Officials of the Greater National Capital committee of the Board of Trade, sponsors of the event with the National Captial Parks, said they would liked to have elected them all.

The judges were Miss Ella C. Werner, Mrs. Robert H. Menzel, Mrs. Ernest H. Daniel, Mrs. C. D. Lowe, Mrs. Helena D. Reed, Mrs. Lucy S. Howorth, Thomas L. Eagan, B. H. McCeney and Frank B. Steele.

More Bands in Parade

The Board of Trade's Hallowe'en committee, meeting earlier at the Willard Hotel, said the number of bands for the parade would exceed those of last year. They emphasized that there still is time for entries of commercial floats and other units.

Ann Rutherford to Talk on The Post-WJSV Broadcast at 10:15 Tonight; Scarlet Looking Forward to Date With Seven College Men

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Ann Autherford, Hollywood's newest screen "starlet," who recently joined the Nation's campaign against motoring tragedies by accepting a leading role in M.-G.-M.'s safety film, "The Devil Is Driving," will be heard tonight on The Post-WJSV Traffic Safety Award program.

Eager to aid in the quest for careful and courteous drivers—prospective candidates for The Post-WJSV Safety Award tags—the 18-year-old actress will deliver a special message to Washington youth at 10:15 p. m.

"Washington is the grandest city I have ever visited," she said yesterday, "and as the Capital of our country, I think it should set an example in about everything. We take our traffic safety problem pretty seriously on the West Coast, and I think it should be taken seriously everywhere."

She Hopes to Save Lives

Even though four personal appearances daily leave the young film star little time for rest, she enthusiastically agreed to participate in the District's latest efforts to reduce accident casualties.

During the filming of "The Devil is Driving," Miss Rutherford said she realized for the first time how many persons—boys and girls her own age—lost their lives annually in traffic accidents.

After her first appearance on the Capitol Theater stage yesterday, "Andy Hardy's" sweetheart was just as excited as the day she got her first movie part. In her dressing room, she talked a blue streak to her mother and elder sister, Judith, 22, who arrived here yesterday from Hollywood.

She acted more like a schoolgirl after her first role in a school play than a rising young film actress. She was an ordinary girl, asking eager questions about "Daddy" and if "Uncle John" sent her his love.

Ann said she was looking forward to her "mass date" Tuesday night, when seven college boys will escort her around town.

"With all those men, there ought to be some left over for Judith, don't you think?" laughed the brown-eyed actress.

"Not for me," responded her sister. "I wouldn't 'horn in'—even if you will have plenty to go around."

Her first glimpse of the Capitol dome was Ann's biggest thrill since reaching Washington, she said.

"I got a lump in my throat and realized how fortunate we are to live in America."

And she meant it, too.

G. W. Doctor Reports Way to Ease Childbirth

Twilight Sleep Given In 6,000 Cases Here, He Tells Surgeons

By Howard W. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Writer.

Philadelphia, Oct. 20.—A new way of starting twilight sleep with a port wine cocktail containing paraldehyde was reported to the American College of Surgeons today at a symposium on reducing the pain of childbirth.

The symposium indicated that twilight sleep, in three main forms, is coming into general use in the United States after years of controversy. Exceptions when it cannot be used were noted.

The first form of twilight sleep, which started in Germany with scopolamine and morphine and gave the method its popular name, is still in use in this country. The second method uses barbiturates, such as amytals or nembutal, and the third employs paraldehyde.

Reported From G. W. U.

The new paraldehyde cocktail was reported by Dr. Howard F. Kane, of George Washington University, at the closing session of the convention.

Paraldehyde burns more severely than the hottest pepper—a fact which has made it difficult to give by mouth. Yet that is the quickest way to get effect—about 10 minutes being required to produce drowsiness.

The port wine mixture, Dr. Kane said, solves the problem. The cocktail is gulped in three fast swallows with water for a chaser.

Paraldehyde is a form of alcohol, closely related chemically to drinking alcohol. Its use for twilight sleep, after originating in Boston, was started in Washington five years ago. Since then it has been used for 6,000 mothers in that city alone.

Paradehyde the Safest

The trouble with twilight sleep, the symposium contended, is occasional danger to mothers and babies, particularly in delay in starting breathing. Dr. Kane declared paraldehyde is the safest of all. He said only one death of a mother has been reported in which paraldehyde was a contributing factor.

Dr. Thaddeus L. Montgomery, of Philadelphia, said belief that twilight sleep is painfree is a popular fallacy. Pain frequently is present but is much reduced, he said.

Dr. Kane said that with paraldehyde 95 per cent of the mothers afterwards had no recollection of pain, although they recalled some events.

The consensus held there is no single kind of twilight sleep for everyone, but that there are many combinations of anesthetics which have to be applied according to individual needs.

Dr. John C. Buch, of Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, Nashville, told of a new drug—Stilboestrol—which substitutes for women's sex hormones. In 16 cases tried by him the effects were all good, which betters the usual records of sex hormones.

Impetuous Playboy Charters Plane For Dancer, but Denies Engagement; Millionaire Says 4 Blondes Were Enough

By International News Service

Hollywood, Oct. 20.—Impetuous Tommy Manville, millionaire playboy with an admitted weakness for blondes in large numbers, today appeared headed for a dash to the altar with a brunette.

That is how Elinor Troy, ravenhaired, black-eyed singer and dancer, understands the situation.

[Miss Troy was a former resident of Washington and a beauty contest winner from the District. Her father is a local antique dealer.—Editor's note.]

Miss Troy was en route to New York tonight as the solitary passenger aboard a big transport plane chartered by the much-married playboy.

[In New York Manville denied that he planned to marry Miss Troy, the Associated Press reported.

["No, of course not," said Manville, when he was asked if he planned to marry Miss Troy, "four times is enough, isn't it?"

[Tommy said he would meet Miss Troy at Newark Airport at 9 a. m., Eastern standard time, tomorrow, with an escort of 37 policemen from "all over everywhere."

[Asked why he was bringing her here if marriage was not his purpose, he said, "I just want someone to do the town with me."

["She's gorgeous, I love her and she's terrific," the asbestos heir said.—Editor's note.]

Before taking off, Miss Troy revealed she and Manville have been secretly engaged for three months. That would date from her departure for Hollywood to try a whirl at the movies.

"I do hope we'll be married in the Little Church Around the Corner in New York," said the beauty, who attained prominence some months ago by socking Jack Doyle, the "Irish Thrush," in a Broadway night club.

Early this morning, according to Miss Troy, Manville telephoned and said if she would return to New York by airplane immediately he would marry her tomorrow.

Impatient Tommy was not content with ordinary airline schedules. He chartered a regular American Airlines passenger plane with full crew at a cost of $2,600, it was learned.

More than that, the contract specifically states that the plane must arrive in New York by 9:30 a. m. (E. S. T.) tomorrow, an elapsed flying time of approximately 14 hours.

American Airlines orders to the pilot were to make the transcontinental jump with only one stop, at Fort Worth, Tex. Officials pointed out that if the schedule is kept a new transcontinental speed record for commercial passenger ships will be established.

It would be Manville's fifth marriage and the third for the singer-dancer.

Hero Saves 40 Boys in Gun Fight

By the United Press.

Austin, Tex., Oct. 20.—Jack Visage, instructor in physical education, tonight was the hero of a shooting affray which endangered the lives of 40 grammar school boys.

Visage commanded the boys, who ranged in age from 12 to 14, to lie down when police exchanged shots with an alleged bank robber, and when some of them hesitated he pushed them down. He even tackled one of the bigger boys.

A masked gunman identified as Howard Tatum, of Austin, walked into the Blanco National Bank at Blanco, Tex., yesterday, handed a bank employe a five-gallon oil can and ordered him to fill it with money. The gunman escaped with $1,176.

Early today Tatum took an automobile from a deputy sheriff. State highway patrolmen flushed him a little later and chased him at 90 miles an hour down a highway leading past the Fulmore Grammer School in Austin.

As Tatum approached the school he abandoned the car and ran across the school grounds. He took refuge behind a tree 20 feet from where Visage was talking to the group of boys. The two patrolmen rushed up and the shooting started.

"Hit the ground, lie flat," Visage shouted as bullets kicked up dust at the boys' feet. More police arrived, firing. Tatum emptied two pistols, then threw up his hands. Police took $1,080 from his pockets.

"I thought police were chasing the man to give him a speeding ticket," said Jack Schneider, 12. "Then the shooting started and Mr. Visage yelled at us to hit the ground and I did. I was scared but not very much; it happened too quick."

Jack Shelby, 13, said he felt pretty safe after two other boys landed on top of him. "It looked like officers were all around and the bullets were coming from every direction," he said. "One hit the ground about a yard from my foot."

Ray Smith, 13, fell on a thorny plant. "That didn't worry me at the time though because the cops were shooting and bullets were popping up puffs of dust all around," he said.

Tatum was shot in the foot, State Motor Police Capt. George Schauer in the right thigh. Neither was injured seriously.

Government agents charge he is the leader of a ring making alcohol in Westchester County and New Jersey, delivering about 2,000 gallons a day. This ring has cost the Government about $2,500,000 in taxes in the past six months, it is charged.

300 U-Boat Victims Landed, Tell of Terror and Suffering

By William McGaffin,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Bordeaux, France, Oct. 20.—Tales of terror and suffering were told tonight by many of the 300 survivors from two British steamers sunk by a submarine Tuesday in the Atlantic about 500 miles off the Spanish coast.

Those who could manage it sang "God Save the King" and "My Country 'Tis of Thee" as Capt. D. J. McKenzie brought the rescue ship, the American freighter Independence Hall, into port.

Some of the survivors were barefoot. Many of them had suffered heavily from exposure. Long rows of ambulances were drawn up and a corps of nurses were waiting when the small freighter steamed into the harbor.

A revised estimate was that 61 persons lost their lives in the sinking last Tuesday of the Yorkshire and six or seven in the sinking half an hour later of the City of Mandalay.

Scores of the survivors were carried off the ship on stretchers and taken to hospitals.

An American steward on the Independence Hall collapsed from overwork when the ship reached port and he also was hospitalized.

All those rescued were English and East Indians en route to England. A number were in a serious condition from hours in the cold seas in lifebelts. Many children were among them and a few English soldiers.

About 60 passengers aboard the Independence Hall themselves got a bad case of jitters when a submarine appeared near the freighter as it was engaged in the rescue of survivors from the City of Mandalay at dusk Tuesday, they related tonight.

Some of those rescued said that the City of Mandalay and the Yorkshire were grouped with 19 other ships being convoyed by warships but became separated from the convoy one day out from Gibraltar.

A submarine struck at the 10,000-ton Yorkshire after following it all day.

A half hour later the submarine struck at the 7,000-ton City of Mandalay.

The Independence Hall got an SOS about 4 p. m. Tuesday from the Yorkshire and then shortly afterwards, another from the City of Mandalay.

Putting as much speed as possible on the freighter, Capt. McKenzie's crew reached the City of Mandalay first, about 40 minutes later.

Two of the Mandalay's lifeboats were awash, with scores of people floating in the heavy seas in lifebelts.

By the time the freighter reached it the City of Mandalay was breaking in two. Rescue work took two hours because of the tremendous seas.

Tons of oil were thrown on the water.

A 4-year-old baby in a life belt was rescued, but its mother died.

As the 60 Independence Hall passengers did what they could to help and watched the terrorizing scene, a submarine believed to be that which sank the English boats suddenly emerged from the sea near the rescue freighter.

Both survivors and passengers aboard the rescue ship screamed their fright, the passengers said, but the submarine merely signaled, "how many have you saved?" It remained alongside a short time and then dived once more into the sea.

The weary crew of the Independence Hall then set out for the Yorkshire but was unable to reach that spot until 10 o'clock Tuesday night.

The Yorkshire had sunk in nine minutes after it was torpedoed, the survivors said. Those rescued were in lifeboats. The victims long since had disappeared beneath the waves. Brilliant moonlight aided the crew of the Independence Hall.

Women took turns sleeping in available cabins, which the regular passengers deserted for the emergency. Many of them slept on floors. Many were without shoes when they jumped into the icy sea. Bundled in blankets, the men slept on the open deck and in the carpenter shop. Others less hardy were given the heat of the engine room.

Executive Boards Supplant Courts, McNutt Tells Bar

Administration of justice is passing from the courts to administrative boards, Paul V. McNutt, administrator of the Federal Security Agency, told the Federal Bar Association dinner last night.

Emphasizing the importance of the growth of administrative law, he declared at the Congressional Country Club that the Government "finds itself in a position where it must fashion a rule for the particular case with only a skeleton statute for guidance," he pointed out.

McNutt paid tribute to the progressive activities of the organization and remarked, "The legal profession must formulate in legal principles the results of administrative experience in order to revent our Government from becoming a Government of men and not laws."

Machine-Gunner Gets Nazi Plane

Paris, Oct. 20 (AP).—Adjutant Charles Legris was cited today as the first Frenchman in the war to bring down an enemy plane by light machine-gun fire from land.

The army announced Legris saw two Messerschmidt pursuit planes flying low over Bettwiller, southeast of Sarreguemines, September 24 and started firing. The first plane plunged to earth. The pilot was taken prisoner.

Target Shooter Faces Charge in Md. Man's Death

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 20 (AP).—State's Attorney Charles F. Wagaman said today James Neiderhofer, 23, of Hagerstown, would be charged with manslaughter in the death of Harry V. Smith, 61-year-old retired railroad man.

Smith was shot yesterday as he walked near his home in the western section of the city and died today. Neiderhofer surrendered to police.

Wagaman quoted Neiderhofer as saying he had been target shooting with a girl friend near the scene but did not know his bullets had struck anyone. No charge would be placed against the girl, Wagaman said.

Ankara Pact Seen Insuring Peace in Levant

Most Capitals View It as Allied Victory, Damper on Il Duce

Copyright by New York Times.

London, Oct. 20.—Unaccustomed as it has become in recent months to receive bouquets for its acumen or success, the British foreign office behaved with becoming modesty today as comment from many of the world's capitals, Berlin dissenting and Moscow noncommittal, hailed the signing of the Anglo-French treaty of mutual assistance with Turkey, as a major development of the war.

The only official statement here anent the signing of the treaty which, it is felt, will insure Italian neutrality in the Mediterranean and put a damper on Russo-German ambitions in the Balkans and the Near East, was that it would be registered with the League of Nations. But satisfaction over the world's reaction, especially of those centers most vitally affected, was imperfectly concealed.

Especially pleasing to British diplomatic circles were reports from Damascus that Arab public opinion had greeted the compact of Ankara with most lively satisfaction. It was felt there, according to dispatches, that from now on security has been definitely established in the Near East. The treaty was described in the press there as "the most important event since the outbreak of the war and a weighty factor in directing events toward final victory of the Allies," according to the Reuters Agency.

View Is General

Comment gathered by Reuters from many neutral capitals reflected similar views. Quoting Al Balagh the leading opposition organ at Cairo, the London Times reported that the treaty was welcomed there as strengthening the Anglo-Egyptian treaty by "forming a solid bloc of Turkey, Rumania, Greece and Egypt with Great Britain and France, pledged to maintain peace in the eastern Mediterranean."

A Reuters dispatch from Belgrade said that while official comment was not forthcoming, there was no echo there of the suggestion from Berlin that the tripartite treaty infringed the Balkan pact. On the contrary, the news agency reported that the treaty was welcomed there as stabilizing influence in the Balkans.

In Turkey itself, reports received here indicated that the treaty was enthusiastically received. News of the signing of the document completely filled the first pages of the Turkish press and photographs of King George VI and President Lebrun were published with those who actually affixed their signatures as plenipotentiaries. Although there was no official comment in Athens, which together with Rumania, had guarantees against aggression strengthened by the treaty, according to news dispatches, there was enthusiastic newspaper comment which reflected the satisfaction of the people and the government of Greece.

Great prominence was given in Dutch papers to the signing of the treaty which was said to be regarded as an important success for the Allies and a stabilizing factor in the Mediterranean. The Scandinavian diplomats were said to be pleased with the conclusion of the treaty as a development likely to have a favorable influence on Russian negotiations with Finland.

Seen as Blow at Nazis

From Stockholm, Reuters quoted the Publisher Dagons Nyheder as commenting that the signing of the treaty did not mean that Turkey might not reconsider Russian proposals. That Turkey had departed from the important object of her Balkan policy, "namely the maintenance of neutrality," was the comment of Tidningen, as reported by Reuters. The same paper was quoted as saying that the compact could only be regarded as an "hostile action against Germany."

Of special interest, because of Japan's remoteness from the scene of conflict, were comments published in the Japanese newspaper, Yomiuri Shimbun, which described the successful conclusion of negotiations at Ankara as a "signal Anglo-French diplomatic victory over Germany." The Japan Times was quoted as follows:

"It is clearly understandable that Soviet Russia, Germany and Italy each from different motives were making efforts to extend their sphere of influence in the Balkans. By the rupture of the Russo-Turkish talks it has been made clear that the Anglo-French inuence is likely to prove a formidable factor in obstructing the Soviet policy in the Balkans. The Soviet plan for control of the Black Sea therefore has met a setback.

Rumanians Pleased

Copyright by New York Times.

Bucharest, Oct. 20.—Diplomatic circles said tonight it was expected that Turkish Foreign Minister Shukru Saracoglu would tour the Balkan capitals following completion of his report to Ankara. According to these sources he will visit the members of the Balkan entente and Bulgaria.

In the meantime, it has become apparent that Rumania is very satisfied with the Anglo-French-Turkish pact. It is felt here that this definitely brings Turkey upon the side of the Allies. It is thought that this can only strengthen Rumania's position and enable her to resist more successfully any possible aggression.

It is also distinctly comforting to Rumania to know that Turkey is now more strongly than ever a party to the Anglo-French guaranty of Rumania's frontiers.

Uniform Cost Accounting Urged

Christopher Del Sesto told the committee "it is almost impossible to determine the efficiency of the large corporations of today."

Hitler Becomes 'Mr. Petersen' In Scandinavian Spy Scare

Northern Countries Paralyzed by Fear, Besse Day Reports

BESSE DAY

Hitler is "Mr. Petersen" in Norwegian these days and Mussolini comes out "Mr. Olsen" over coffee cups in Oslo.

These are symptoms of Scandinavia's war-time state of nerves, as reported by Miss Besse B. Day, Forest Service statistician, of 3136 Dumbarton avenue northwest. She returned to Washington this week after two months in England, Norway, Sweden and Finland.

Aliases are given the head men of Berlin and Rome because of Scandinavian fears that spies are listening in on every conservation, Miss Day said yesterday.

The spy scare has virtually sealed Sweden's frontiers, she said, explaining that travel would have been impossible for her without an official passport. Miss Day's trip was arranged by the Department of Agriculture to enable her to visit Scandinavian forest experiment stations and study what she calls "statistical phases of research work in forest economics."

Norwegian shipping companies, according to Miss Day, no longer telephone passengers the hour of sailings but send an agent to notify travellers in person.

The Scandinavian nations reminded the Forestry Service worker of "a lot of birds watching a snake—the snake gobbles up one of them but the others are too paralyzed to do anything but wait their turn."

"They all seemed to be eager for England and France to back up Poland but desperately anxious to stay neutral themselves," she said. "I was told in Sweden they wouldn't go into the war unless the United States did."

Miss Day spoke gratefully of the services given by American consular officers. "I had never come into contact with the State Department before," she related, "and I was greatly impressed by the helpful spirit."

Mrs. Florence Harriman, American minister to Norway, gave teas twice a week for the American women in Oslo, she recalled. "After tea we sewed clothing for Norwegian fisher families, which have been hard hit by the war, since they can't venture beyond the 3-mile limit."

Britain's version of the war has circulated only in limited circles in Sweden and Norway, she reported, while in Finland "German propaganda is everywhere."

Miss Day sailed from Bergen October 5 aboard the S. S. Oslofjord. When she asked a ship's officer when they would be out of the danger zone, he replied, "When we land in New York."

Germany Denies Seeking Peace Now

French soil, though they were declared to have driven French off all German territory.

Planes Told to Spare Buildings

It was even said that the German air force is under strict orders not to attack British bridges, railways or other land installations, but to confine their raids for the time being to British warships.

(The Stockholm newspaper Dagsbladet said in a Berlin dispatch that Germany informed Russia she was prepared to "destroy the British fleet and paralyze Britain within six months."

(Two Copenhagen newspapers, the National Tidende and Berlinske Tidende, reported from Berlin that Hitler contemplated a new effort to separate France from Britain, making war "with increasing ferocity" against the latter.)

Hints of Polish State

The second indication of stubbornly-lingering Nazi peace hopes lay in hints dropped by informed Nazis tending to confirm the belief that Hitler is considering creation of a new and smaller Polish state that "conforms to historic evolution, economic necessities and ethnological considerations."

These intimations came in the wake of Hitler's decree incorporating two formerly Polish-held areas into the Reich as Posen and West Prussia. It was stressed that this did not imply the fixing of Germany's permanent eastern border.

Leading the German press offensive against the new Anglo-French-Turkish alliance, the Diplomatic-Political Correspondence said Turkey could still avoid being implicated in war, if she would invoke the protocol exempting her from carrying out any obligations that might bring her into conflict with Russia.

Danger Called Serious

Nevertheless, the paper said, Turkey had abandoned her strict neutrality and incurred a serious danger. The correspondence called attention to the fact that Turkey "was greatly applauded by England and France for having resisted the Soviet demand that the Dardanelles be closed to British and French warships."

It appeared, continued the paper, "as though at long last England had attained the end she had pursued for a long time, namely, the control of all three passages into the Mediterranean." (Gibraltar, Suez and the Dardanelles.)

Comparing Turkey to Poland, the correspondence added:

"Moreover, the western powers are once more enabled after a long time to make their peoples hope that—after the elimination of Poland—other continental nations will be at their disposal when the moment comes.

"A Diabolical Manner"

"It has not been forgotten even to appoint generals for auxiliary (Turkish) troops that are entering into the calculations of the western powers.

"Nor has the other possibility of widening the theater of war been concealed, for, in a truly diabolical manner, attention is directed once more to the unilaterally guaranteed Balkan states (Rumania and Greece), who feel increasingly compromised by this guarantee."

(Turkey undertook to aid Britain and France in the event the Allies assist Rumania or Greece in carrying out the Anglo-French antiaggression pledges to those countries.)

After referring to a statement Thursday in the House of Commons by Undersecretary R. A. Butler that the British guaranty to Poland covered only German and not Russian aggression, the correspondence commented:

"It was thus clear that in concluding the pact with Turkey the western powers pursued the aim only of extending the war to that part of Europe. It was less clear, however, in what way Turkey would profit from conclusion of this pact."

The day's German military communique announced the successful conclusion of the operations to expel French troops from Reich soil.

The communique stated:

"Calm was restored to the Western Front southeast of Saarbruecken after conclusion of the fighting. There was no outstanding activity on the entire front, apart from local artillery fire and land scouting."

Several hours after issuance of this communique a German spokesman denied the French assertions that the recent Nazi drive was a large-scale offensive action. With a single exception, when the French sent a regiment into action, it was contended the units that have done the fighting on the Western Front so far have not exceeded a company in size.

Nazis Hail Athenia Story

Berlin (Saturday), Oct. 21 (U.P.).—An official Nazi account published by newspapers today under headlines "Athenia Crime Proved!" said that an American survivor, Gustav A. Anderson, had established that the British liner was sunk on September 3 at "the command" of Winston Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty.

The Germans have said Britain ordered the vessel destroyed to arouse American anger against Germany, because many American refugees from the European war zones were aboard.

Anderson, a travel bureau operator of Evanston, Ill., who was on the Athenia, filed an affidavit with the State Department in Washington stating the liner carried guns, although none actually were mounted.

Repatriates Pour In

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Oct. 20.—The government today opened a system of special short-term credits for businesses throughout the Reich which have been hard hit by the war to prevent bankruptcies and sharp disruptions in national economy.

Repatriated Germans continued to arrive in Gotenhafen (Gdynia) and Danzig. Most of those arriving from the Baltic countries were professional people—doctors, teachers, artists, lawyers—but from 15 to 20 per cent were farmers.

Great pride was expressed in official circles over the opening of two furnaces in the new Hermann Goering iron works at Linz. The works were founded two years ago with the intention of making them Germany's and Europe's largest.

Officials said "all matters in Poland are in a state of flux despite the creation of West Prussia and Posen" when asked for details on the delineation of boundaries disclosed yesterday.

Patrols Battle At Corner of Luxemburg

French Civilians Quit 2 Villages at Frontier Of Duchy on Moselle

By G. H. Archambault.
Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 20.—Except for one sector the Allied front was quiet today. That was the key area between the Moselle and the Saar rivers, adjoining neutral Luxemburg.

All day, patrols and scouting parties were busy in no-man's land and guns on both sides also went into action. The French took a number of prisoners.

It was reported that the population had been evacuated from the French villages of Mondorf and Evrange on the Luxemburg frontier. Mondorf, in fact, is astride the border, one portion on French soil and the other in the grand duchy. It is 5½ miles from the Moselle River, which forms the frontier between the Reich and Luxemburg. Evrange lies some 4 miles farther west. They are connected by several roads with Remich, an important crossroad town on the Luxemburg side of the Moselle 9 miles north of the front.

Nazi Movements Cease

The remainder of the front was relatively quiet in the continued bad weather. Moreover, activity in the German rear zone has ceased. The situation has reverted to the watchful waiting of the first fortnight of October.

Yet it is felt that the German high command scarcely would have massed its army behind the Rhine-Moselle front merely in order to fight an outpost action even if it were on a 20-mile front. Four hypotheses are being advanced for the failure of the Germans to proceed with the operation begun Monday.

The first is that another "peace offensive is preparing" with the special object to dissever France and Great Britain. It is based on diplomatic action progressing in Berlin and the phraseology of a long German communique reviewing military operations to date. It was rumored here Chancellor Hitler himself drafted it and regards it as a kind of proclamation to the French nation.

Reading between the lines, references to the modest proportions the campaign has assumed hitherto and to the fact that German troops have not crossed the frontier, are interpreted in some quarters here as implying there exists a sort of truce today between France and Germany which might become more clearly defined through conversations.

Attack Held a Diversion

A second hypothesis is that Monday's attack was in the nature of a diversion while other preparations were being made elsewhere. Those who entertain it point to the activity in the Moselle sector and the evacuation of villages along the Luxemburg border. They add that German troop concentrations reported in recent days must have had a purpose. If it were a matter of taking up winter quarters, dispersion rather than concentration should be the rule.

A third hypothesis is that the Germans realize the great strength of the line of resistance the French have had time to organize. This supposition, however, seems nullified by the facts that Monday's operation was definitely aggressive and that although only some 30,000 men actually were engaged, more than thrice that number was held in immediate reserve. This force in itself seems to indicate that the enemy was prepared to meet resistance.

The final hypothesis is based on bad weather now ruling on the front.

Three Sectors Shifted

It is now possible to give approximate positions occupied by the French on the Rhine-Moselle front in consequence of the German operation on Monday. Following a line from the east to the west the situation is:

The Lauter sector, unchanged; French penetration into German territory remains about 1 mile.

The Hardt sector, unchanged; French penetration about 2 miles.

The Hornbach sector, positions brought back into French territory, some 5 miles north of Bitche, so as to reduce the salient.

The Saarbruecken sector, positions brought back to the proximity of the frontier.

The Warndt sector, unchanged; French penetration remains about 8 miles.

The Nied sector, unchanged; French penetration about 2½ miles.

The Moselle sector, positions brought back into French territory just behind the frontier.

Italy Now Calls Turkish Pact Unimportant

Rome Observers See Benefits, Gloss Over Blow at Fascists

By Herbert L. Matthews.
Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Oct. 20.—A day's reflection on the Anglo-Franco-Turkish pact has led Italians to take a more favorable view of its possible effects.

Correspondents evidently were ordered to find loopholes and weaknesses and generally to minimize the importance of the pact. There is virtually no acknowledgement of the fact that it is aimed at Italy just as much as Germany.

Many feel that this will help Italy's efforts to build up a Balkan and Danubian neutral block. Political and economic interests of England, France and Turkey do not conflict with Italy's in the Balkans. Their great competitor is Germany, and this is a check to German expansion.

Italy, like Turkey and the Allies, wants peace in the Balkans. If she cannot have peace, at least she does not want Russia or Germany to get away with the invasion of Rumania.

Pope Disappointed

Vatican City, Oct. 20.—Vatican circles generally see the Anglo-French-Turkish pact as a blow to Russian expansion but at the same time, there is apparent disappointment that Turkey should have maintained her friendship toward Moscow unimpaired.

The Osservatore Romano calls this exception in Russia's favor "a grave limitation of the political efficacity of tripartite accord." "Who is menacing the Balkans and the Dardanelles if not Russia?" it asks.

Ambulances Line Up in 3 Fleets to Meet U. S. Liner

New York, Oct. 20 (AP).—Three fleets of ambulances were assembled today to meet the American liner President Harding when she arrives here tomorrow with the largest storm casualty list to reach this port in many years—73 injured, of whom at least 20 will have to be taken off on stretchers.

The President Harding, carrying 597 passengers—about 150 more than her normal capacity—fought a long and savage struggle Tuesday night and Wednesday morning with a hurricane. She lost a cabin waiter, Paul Johnson, overboard. Her starboard rail and a lifeboat were swept away. Among those reported hurt, apparently not seriously, was Paul van Zeeland, the former Belgian premier.

Rains Have Washed Out Nazi Chances in West, Reporter Says

By Harold Denny,
Copyright by New York Times.

With the British Forces in France, Oct. 20.—Hostilities between Great Britain and Germany are now well along in the second month and not a shot has yet been fired in anger by the British ground forces which are now firmly installed on this front. Nor, so far as we can learn, have the Germans made any serious gestures this way or even sent over reconnoitering airplanes.

Barely a week ago there arrived here the first permanent contingent of war correspondents—a formidable expedition of eight Americans, a dozen British newspapermen plus radio correspondents and photographers bringing the whole corps of men assigned to report what is happening here to 38. Thus at the present writing we are two-score of war reporters in search of a war.

During our stay we have seen famous British units taking their battle positions until their front now is fully occupied and daily becomes stronger as more troops arrive and turn to.

Reports published in London about the smoothness and efficiency with which the installation of an expeditionary force in a foreign country has been accomplished, have not been exaggerated.

The whole picture is one of quiet efficiency and confidence, and the men in Great Britain's front line and in the area behind it, appear to be extraordinarily keen and competent. It seems safe to predict that many errors of the last war will be avoided in this one, for many already have been avoided.

The British command in the field is carrying out its promise made to us in London that we should be permitted to see what was going on.

Perhaps military secrets have been hidden from us but we have not only been allowed but encouraged and helped to go to every part of the front and the vital services behind it and ask any questions we liked of anybody from a general to a private. Conducting officers accompany us on these daily expeditions. They do not try to put a brake on the giving of information but actually encourage officers and men to answer frankly anything we ask, assuring them any facts that might be valuable to the Germans will be eliminated by a censor.

Frequently we spend our evenings listening to extremely frank informative lectures of high staff officers which, though productive of little we can send now, helps to build up our picture for the whole British expeditionary force and its workings and give us a background which will be invaluable if and when Chancellor Adolf Hitler takes a crack at this line.

Censorship, the necessity of which in time of war we recognize, made us some trouble. It has cut things out of our dispatches which probably might as well have been published—one, but only one, of my dispatches has been really mangled. But it is not a censorship aimed at us; there is no malice in it.

Its object, as we have found it thus far, is to prevent our disclosing anything which might hurt Great Britain's military effort or help Germany. As the correspondents learn more and more of what they must avoid and as the censorship machinery, which is still new, shakes down into smoother running order, we find that the problem becomes less and less serious.

Our greatest handicap now is moving our dispatches to our home offices. At first, this was done by airplane to London but the fog and rain of the last few days stopped that for the time being at least. Now we are permitted to telephone our stories, but there are many technical difficulties.

The British military authorities are being as helpful as possible in this and measures are being worked out jointly by the military authorities and the correspondents which it is hoped will improve our communications. It is hard to see how they can be satisfactory until direct telegraphic communication is established.

And now, we war correspondents in search of war are daily becoming more and more skeptical whether or not we shall see one on this front for many months to come.

AFL Asks Court To Quash Count Against Union

Indictment Against Teamsters Is Called Vague by Counsel

American Federation of Labor counsel moved in the District Court yesterday to dismiss the indictment of a Washington teamster union for criminal conspiracy to win a jurisdictional dispute by strike, violence and other "restraint of trade."

Joseph A. Padway, A. F. L. counsel, said that if legality of the indictment were upheld the labor movement would be thrust back to where it was in 1806, when unions were declared to be "unlawful conspiracies."

Local No. 639, of the Brotherhood of Teamsters and five officials of the union were accused of violating the Sherman antitrust act by their activities to have their members employed as drivers of building machinery, instead of members of the operating engineers' union with which Washington employers had contracts.

Padway yesterday attacked the legal basis for the indictment in two ways, filing both a demurrer and a motion to quash.

The A. F. L. said the indictment was so vague and uncertain about what was alleged to have been done that the defendants were at a loss to answer it.

The A. F. L. pointed out that the Clayton act exempted unions from the provisions of the Sherman act.

7th Street Savings Depositors to Get $52,000 More

Receiver Justus S. Wardell yesterday announced the declaration of a 5 per cent dividend to the 2,700 depositors of the closed Seventh Street Savings Bank. Payments will be made beginning Tuesday morning. Clients will be notified when to appear for payment.

Meantime, efforts were pushed yesterday to expedite distribution of $793,000 to 18,000 depositors of the closed Park Savings Bank.

Ninety per cent already has been paid to the Seventh Street depositors and the value of the new 5 per cent dividend is about $52,000. The bank closed in 1933.

Remaining assets are estimated at $131,395, including the $52,000 soon to be disbursed. Hence it would appear that the depositors eventually will collect all their funds.

Church of the Week

Ground to Be Broken for Ryland Methodist

Religious and civic leaders will lead tomorrow's ceremony for the first unit of the $75,000 project

Tomorrow will be a "red-letter" day for parishioners of Ryland Methodist Church, Tenth and D streets southwest, when ground is broken for the first unit of a new $75,000 church and educational center at Branch avenue and S street, near Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Marking the second major step in the congregation's gradual transfer to a new community, the exercises, set for 3:30 p. m., will be led by Walter M. Bastian, president of the Methodist Union, an organization which donated $4,000 for the lot, Dr. Edgar C. Beery, superintendent of the East Washington District of the Baltimore Conference, and the Rev. Karl G. Newell, Ryland pastor.

Also joining in the program will be George Barker, J. W. Martin and T. J. Lynch, active members of the Randle Highlands, Hillcrest and Hollywood Park Citizens Associations, respectively; Mrs. Fred M. Cawson, for over 50 years a parishioner at Ryland; Mrs. William Houlton, 80, a resident of the new community and a new member of the congregation; the Rev. Glenn Faucett, pastor of East Washington Heights Baptist Church; the Rev. Edward B. Wilcox, of Trinity Methodist Church, and others.

The decision to move was made some time ago because of the growing encroachment of Federal and commercial buildings near the old church site, which the congregation is hoping to sell for about $35,000 to help finance completion of the new project.

The Ryland Church, which boasts a 96-year-old record and whose pews were used for hospital beds during the War Between the States, is now in a transitional stage, with services being held in the temporary parsonage on Branch avenue and in the old building.

Under the present arrangement—an iron-man task for the Rev. Mr. Newell—worship services are held at 11 a. m. and Sunday school at 9:30 a. m. in the old church, and Sunday school at 9:45 a. m., Epworth League at 8 p. m. and services at 7 p. m. in the parsonage.

While the services at the parsonage are drawing mainly residents of that community, the pastor thinks that about 75 per cent of his old congregation will eventually be worshiping in the new section.

The Ryland project, which promises to be unique among religious structures, will be constructed along the style of Old English country churches, with an outdoor amphitheater for summer vespers, rustic altars and benches, and stone archways.

The educational building, which will face on Branch avenue, will have space for 350 scholars in six departmental rooms, and will contain a Fellowship Hall with a well-equipped stage.

In the church unit, which will have a seating capacity for 300 persons, will be memorial windows, a balcony and other features. Names of members of the old Ryland Church will be placed on a stone plaque in the new edifice. Fred M. Kramer, architect for the new Social Security buildings, has offered his services gratis to the congregation.

The first unit—the church basement—will accommodate 250 people, including members of the primary department. Its construction is expected to begin early next month.

The Rev. Mr. Newell heads the building committee, consisting of M. H. Fearnow, F. J. Liddy, J. P. Moore, James Donaldson, Mrs. William Leishear and T. Hayward Brown. Trustees of the congregation are Brown, Fearnow, Liddy, J. T. Abshear, and A. H. Roderick.

Other active groups and their leaders are the Women's Guild, of which Mrs. Leishear is president; the Brotherhood, led by James Aiken; the Ladies' Aid, under Mrs. G. F. Kinghorn, and the Epworth League, headed by Miles Murray. Samuel McKenny is titular head of the old Sunday school, with Charles Haga as his assistant, while F. J. Liddy leads the Sunday school services at the new site. Mrs. William Riley is one of the old church's most loyal workers.

Native Washingtonian, the Rev. Mr. Newell was graduated from old Business High School and Emerson Institute, and later from Boston University and Ohio Wesleyan. He came to Ryland five years ago after serving pulpits in Williamsport, Md., and Rosedale Methodist Church, here.

He married the organist at Rosedale—Miss Ruth Davis, and they now have four children—Ruth, 9; Carol, 8; Richard, 5, and Karl, jr., 1. The cleric will preach tomorrow on "We Shall Build On!"

Archbishop Cicognani Requests Support of 12th Annual Drive

The twelfth annual celebration of Catholic Mission Sunday, tomorrow, which has been heralded by pastoral letters in all American archdioceses and dioceses during the past weeks, will be marked by special sermons at masses and pontifical vespers.

That the celebration will be more significant and larger than ever before was indicated by the Right Rev. Mgr. Thomas J. McDonnell, national director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, under whose auspices it is being held.

He pointed out that America, once a mission country, now bears the major reponsibility for support of missions everywhere, due to disturbed world conditions, and quoted from a letter he received recently from the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States.

"In so many lands just now, because of the crisis through which the world is passing, gifts will be impossible which at other times were a firm support for mission work," Archbishop Cicognani wrote. "I earnestly request, therefore, that every effort be made during 1939 for the successful carrying out of the program for mission aid, which has been undertaken by the Pontifical Society for the Propagation of the Faith."

Archdiocesan director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith is the Right Rev. Mgr. Louis C. Vaeth, rector of Our Lady of Victory parish.

Outstanding Protestant churchmen of 14 denominations have appealed to 60,000 clergymen to stress the observance urging discussion of Christianity's relation to the issues involved in the present neutrality debate before a vote is taken.

Bethany. "The Power to Become" is the Rev. M. P. German's subject for tomorrow at 11 a. m. The men's Bible Class will be taught by Horace L. Stevenson.

'China Relief Week' to Open With Drive to Raise $10,000

Rev. Charles Enders and Dr. E. L. Ford Chairman and Secretary of Local Group; Project Indorsed by Federation of Churches

Washington churchmen of all denominations will get an opportunity to share in a noble bit of practical Christianity in the next seven days—"China Relief Week"—by supporting the Nation-wide drive for funds to relieve suffering.

Beginning tomorrow, efforts will be made to raise $10,000 or one hundredth of the million-dollar goal of the church committee for China relief, with headquarters in New York City under the direction of Fred Atkins Moore.

The Rev. Charles Enders, pastor of Concordia Evangelical Lutheran Church, and Dr. E. L. Ford, educational director of Foundry Methodist Church, chairman and secretary of the local committee, have announced that the Washington Federation of Churches, through its executive secretary, Dr. W. L. Darby, has indorsed the project.

Organized more than a year ago, the church committee for China relief was designated by three great Christian groups as the official agency through which churches could make a unified appeal for funds. They are the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America and the China Famine Relief, U. S. A., Inc.

Also looming ahead for next week is a continuation of the dedication of the new Augustana Lutheran edifice, with "Neighbors' Night" set for Wednesday, and dedication of its new pipe organ on Friday night. Folke Wennerberg, Counsellor of the Swedish Legation; the Rev. Edward Goetz, president of the Lutheran Ministerial Association of Washington; Senator Henrik Shipstead, of Minnesota, and Dr. W. L. Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS

"EILI, EILI"

"God in heaven above,
Hast Thou abandoned Thine own?
God, Almighty God,
Say not Thy mercy has flown;—
In tempest and flame we have been tormented,
Deep has been our shame,
Your laws we'll cherish till we perish
Before the tyrant's sword.
Save us, Lord! Redeem us from jeopardy,
As before, keep us from danger free.
Witness our tears, hark to our pleading!
Dispel our fears, our pray'rs be heeding."

"Eili, Eili," is a popular Jewish folk song. It was written many years ago from traditional melodies and was sung first by Sophie Karp in this country. It expresses the faith of the Jewish people in their God to save and deliver them from persecution.

Soviet Orders Envoy Back to U. S. at Once

Action Laid to Note On Finland; Oumansky To Catch First Boat

By G. E. R. Gedye.

Copyright by New York Times

Moscow, Oct. 20.—For the first time since breakdown of Franco-British-Soviet negotiations, the British Ambassador, Sir William Seeds, today called on the Soviet commissariat for foreign affairs, where he had an interview with Vice Commissar Vladimir P. Potemkin, lasting more than a hour.

At the same time, the Turkish Ambassador, Khaidar Aktai, visited the commissariat. In British circles it was denied that the two ambassadors' visits had, as it at first seemed, any connection with the Franco-British-Turkish pact. It was denied that there was any connection between the two visits.

The British Ambassador's visit, it was stated, was connected entirely with a different matter that affected only British interests. Other well-informed circles said the British Minister's visit was made on British initiative.

Meantime, as a probable consequence of the interest in Russia's policy displayed in President Roosevelt's note to Mikhail Kalinin, President of the Presidium, the Soviet Ambassador Oumansky, who has been on vacation here for some months, has been instructed to return to Washington immediately and is leaving on the first available boat.

In circles well disposed to Finland, anxiety is expressed lest the jubilation in a certain part of the foreign press—not British, which is considered reacting tactfully—at conclusion of the Turko-Franco-British pact may have the unfortunate result of stiffening Russia's so far fairly moderate attitude toward Finland. Finnish Delegate Juho Paasikivi is to return Monday.

The Bulgarian Minister to the Soviet Union, Nicholas Antonoff, left Moscow for Sofia to report on Russo-Turkish negotiations.

and the German technique in the World War.

Repeating a categorical denial of the German allegations, the war office said:

"Persistent repetition of this flimsy, mendacious story clearly indicated the Germans' intention to use poison gas on the Western Front, in contravention of the 1925 Geneva protocol, of which they are signatories."

In support of its belief that German military history was repeating itself, British authorities said the decision to wage gas warfare was taken by the German high command as early as the fall of 1914. By the spring of 1915 the technical preparations had been completed and five days before a gas attack was launched the German Wolff News Agency gave out a message saying the British at Ypres had used shells and bombs filled with asphyxiating gas.

Honors For Nazi Dead

On the contrary, the war office added, no poison gas even had been experimentally manufactured in Britain at that time, and the decision to explore its war possibilities was not taken until a fortnight after the Germans used it.

The R. A. F. today gave full military honors at the funeral of two Germans killed in Monday's raid. The two were buried in the Porto Bello Cemetery of Edinburgh with 50 officers and men of the Royal Air Force providing an escort. Pipers played a weird melancholy Scot lament and a volley was fired over their graves which were covered with wreaths from the men who shot them down.

There also was an air raid warning sounded in the Solent area today, but it was a false alarm.

have lost themselves in a maze of discussion as to what, where and when a weapon is aggressive and when it is defensive.

"Whether different weapons can be used for either benevolent or malevolent purposes between fighting men is not what we are discussing. The distinctions are not so difficult.

"Every child in Europe knows its destruction comes from bombing planes and poison gas. Equally every child knows that pursuit planes, observation planes, searchlights, anti-aircraft guns and gas masks are its defense. Every child in Europe can tell these weapons apart."

Back to Savagery

Mr. Hoover said "I am not now arguing what will be best for war in general. I am discussing war on women, children and non-fighting men."

Bombing from the air and use of poison gas on civilians means, he said, that the world has gone back to savagery. "Chivalry is certainly dying in our world. . . .

"There are such things in the world as moral and humane standards, despite all the dialecticians to the contrary. I confess at times that it seems of little avail to raise these banners aloft, but unless they be raised, unless there be some check on this world degeneration, there will be nothing left of this civilization. . . .

"I am interested in America holding to moral foundations in these times when civilization itself is rocking."

Urges Basis for Unity

He gave as one reason for his proposal of a substitute for repeal or no repeal of the embargo "to find on this or on some other basis more unity in our own people." The conflict on the question, he said, "has begun to take on a bitterness that threatens our national solidarity in face of dangers.

"Patriotic men and great groups whose sole purpose is American interest are being denounced as pro-Hitler or pro-British, when in fact they are pro-American. Gradually we are dividing into two camps over a question that is after all very secondary to the dominant question of keeping America out of this war."

Arlington Boy, 12, Begins 8th Week In 'Iron Lung'

Twelve-year-old William Taylor today begins his eighth consecutive week as a tenant in the Drinker respirator at Gallinger Hospital.

"He's one of the bravest patients we've ever had," Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent, said yesterday. "Another couple of weeks and he'll equal the record for our respirator."

William, whose home is in Arlington, Va., is suffering from infantile paralysis. When he was first placed in the "iron lung" he could scarcely breathe. Now he is doing so well that he can stay out of the device for as much as half an hour at a time.

Guard divisions would form corps, with certain other essential units.

Funds are expected to be asked for a full stock of weapons and supplies for the additional men and possibly even for the larger force which would have to be mobilized if war starts. The program would give the Nation a total of 27 divisions—9 Regular Army and 18 National Guard—ready for action in case of war.

Labor Shortage Denied

As these developments went forward, the International Association of Machinists challenged a joint War-Navy Department statement that a shortage of skilled workmen threatens the national defense program, contending that there are 20,000 mechanics unemployed at present.

Emmett Davison, secretary-treasurer of the association, made public a letter he sent to Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison offering to cooperate with the Navy in filling jobs with trained men. Condemning statements that the war emergency work is handicapped by lack of skilled workmen, Davison said:

"Our information is that at the various Navy yards there are waiting lists of skilled workers who have not been called for service and have not been given an opportunity of employment. That the men are not being called from these lists, but, at least in some instances, are being hired by a haphazard method commonly being referred to as 'over the counter.'

"We are of the opinion that much of this policy is due to systematic efforts to induce first-class machinists and toolmakers to accept employment at second and third class and below ratings. Difficulties in recruiting skilled workers would appear, and have every indication of being a by-product of an effort to break down wage standards and working conditions."

Officials Confer With Oystermen On Md. Problems

Crisfield, Md., Oct. 20 (AP).—Problems of the oyster industry, with emphasis on the 3-inch cull law, held the attention of 300 oystermen, conservation commission members and State and city officials at a conference preliminary to the opening of the season November 1.

The oystermen declared they were "with the commission 100 per cent" and Commission Chairman Edwin Warfield asserted the program was aimed at improvement of the industry in the years to come, necessitating strict observance of the law now.

A plan for discarding small oysters and shells on natural rocks and marking the spots with buoys so they can be taken later when of marketable size was advanced by Capt. William Wallace, a retired waterman.

The commission announced that certain seed areas of the upper bay would be opened to dredgers at the start of the season to overcome possible reverses resulting from strict enforcement of the cull law.

Lazenby Heads Md. Insurance Men

Annapolis, Oct. 21 (AP).—Joseph D. Lazenby, of Annapolis, was elected president of the Maryland Association of Insurance Agents today at annual convention.

Belt Townsend, of Chestertown, was elected chairman of the executive committee, and George S. Robertson was named to the new post of executive secretary-treasurer. T. B. Cash, of Westminster, was re-elected treasurer, and William M. Scott, of Baltimore, became secretary.

The association also elected as its five regional vice presidents Howard N. German, of Easton, for the First District; J. Vernon Coblentz, of Frederick, for the Second District; Guy T. Warfield, jr., of Baltimore, for the Third District; Charles C. Slayton, of Annapolis, for the Fourth District, and J. E. Legg, of Salisbury, for the Fifth District.

determinating factor must be national safety.

But he made it clear that this rule does not apply to his submarine proclamation.

"The rule that our territorial limits extend as far as our interests require does not apply?" he was asked.

"Not in this case," he replied, emphasizing that the deadline for submarine operations is based on the international legal conception of a 3-mile limit.

Sub Seen Off Florida

Daytona Beach, Fla., Oct. 20 (U.P.).—Three fishermen reported they watched an unidentified submarine cruise on the surface for two hours off the Florida east coast today. They said it stood 8 or 10 miles offshore, carried no colors to indicate its nationality and was between 250 and 300 feet long.

Argentina Permits Subs

Buenos Aires, Oct. 20 (INS).—The Argentine government today announced it will not follow the United States in barring belligerent submarines from its harbors and territorial waters.

U-boats will be permitted to use Argentine ports for 24 hours provided they navigate on the surface, it was stated.

Belief was expressed in Buenos Aires that Chile and Uruguay would adopt the same attitude.

Va. Grange to Hear National Leader

Special Dispatch to The Post

Winchester, Va., Oct. 20.—L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, will be one of the speakers at the annual convention of the Virginia State Grange which will open here October 25, it was announced today.

Others who will participate in the program will be Mark Turner, master of the Virginia Grange; A. Willis Robertson, Congressman from the Seventh Virginia District, and Mrs. Ira C. Cross, lecturer of the Pennsylvania State Grange.

The three-day session is expected to attract approximately 400 farm men and women.

Va. Teachers Plan 'Positive Action' On New Program

Richmond, Va., Oct. 20 (AP).—Joseph T. Healey, president of the Virginia Education Association, told the group's district G convention that the association, after receiving sympathy but no support for its three-point program from the General Assembly, was now prepared to take "positive action."

The Legislature in the past, Healey said, always answered the association's requests for action with the question, "where is the money coming from?" When the association presents its program to the 1940 Assembly, it will be ready to answer that question, Healey asserted.

A bulletin is being prepared, Healey explained, which will describe the State's financial structure, compare taxation in Virginia with that of other States, and will point out ways in which funds can be raised without materially disturbing the State's financial structure.

U. S. Criticism Fails to Shake Japan's Policy

Nomura Says Third Power Can't Change Her Course in Asia

By the Associated Press

Odawara, Japan, Oct. 20.—Foreign Minister Nomura today declared the "determination of the entire Japanese nation to bring about a new order in East Asia is too strong to be changed or affected by the interference of a third power."

Diplomatic observers regarded the Nomura statement as a prompt answer to the strong speech of United States Ambassador Grew yesterday in which he said American public opinion was sharply opposed to Japan's military program in China.

Referring directly to Grew's speech Nomura said:

"I am planning on having a talk with Mr. Grew. I am glad to hear that he said he would work for American-Japanese good will.

"We are engaged in the reconstruction of East Asia from a broad viewpoint and we hope the United States understands both our aim and our determination.

Belgium, Greece May Turn to U. S. For Iron and Coal

Two European neutrals, the Commerce Department said yesterday, may turn to the United States for iron and coal as a result of the war.

K. L. Rankin, American commercial attache at Brussels, was quoted by the department as saying Belgium steel plants are finding it difficult to get iron ore from their regular source in France.

C. L. Jones, attache at Athens, reported Greece, cut off from normal German and English coal supplies, and the United States probably would be able to get a large percentage of this business.

Janssen Quits As Baltimore's Symphony Head

Baltimore, Oct. 20 (AP).—Baltimore's struggling symphony orchestra was left leaderless again today when Werner Janssen, its conductor for the past two years, resigned because of the "seasonal" nature of the orchestra's activity.

Janssen, husband of Ann Harding, the film star, wrote from his Los Angeles home that he felt it was impossible to attain the "perfection that I strive for at all times" when the symphony plays but three months in each year.

"I cannot, in honesty to music, the members of the orchestra, or myself, return once more and go on demanding the gruelling efforts required in order to recapture what is necessarily lost in nine months—only to lose it again at the end of three," the conductor wrote.

Critics praised Janssen's work highly during his two seasons.

Walters, 35, of Front Royal; Mrs. Alice Kilpatrick, 40, of Front Royal; Edward H. Schwandt, 63, Cleveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Minnie Binz, 50, his sister, also of Ohio.

Broadcasters Face New Bolt In Free-Speech Controversy

tarily set up by his fellow broadcasters and resign from the association," he said.

"His statement charging censorship indicates that perhaps he is not fully conversant with the code and the vital problems of public policy underlying it. There can be no charge of censorship or the curtailment of free speech when all spokesmen are given an equal footing at the radio rostrum, free of charge."

Defied N. A. B. to Stop Him

Roosevelt's row with the N. A. B. began October 7 when he stated over an M. B. S. network that he would express his opinion on the neutrality issues in his news comments, and he defied the N. A. B. to stop him. Miller wrote a letter to an M. B. S. official and stated that he considered the action a violation of the code.

N. A. B. officials doubted that Roosevelt can withdraw ten Texas stations from the trade organization. He and his wife own only three stations, they said, although he acts as business agent for the other seven in a small network.

The N. A. B. code prohibition of the sale of time for discussion of controversial issues already has brought a protest from Capitol Hill.

Representative Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri, characterized it as "a direct assault upon one of the most sacred provisions of our Constitution—freedom of speech" and warned the broadcasters that they were "treading on dangerous ground."

Code Defended

N. A. B. officials contend that the code does not bar the broadcasting of controversial discussions but merely restricts to free periods to be set aside by stations on their own initiative. By this device, they point out, a person without money to buy costly radio time will have the same advantage as one with ample financial resources.

They admit, however, that even though stations give free time to Father Coughlin that it is unlikely that he could get a national hook-up of 44 stations at as desirable a time as he now has at a cost of several thousand dollars a week.

The curb on news commentators, such as Elliott Roosevelt, is expected to give the N. A. B. code committee more trouble, however, as it permits expression of opinions on a sustaining program but bars it from commercial broadcasts on which some of the important commentators have appeared from time to time.

Cautioned By Johnson

John F. Patt, vice president of WJR, Detroit, key station of the Coughlin hook-up, pointed this out in a telegram to the N. A. B.

"Did the broadcasters contemplate," he asked, "that this provision of the code would mean that such famous personalities as W. J. Cameron, Dorothy Thompson, Boake Carter, Lowell Thomas, Edwin C. Hill, H. V. Kaltenborn, John B. Kennedy, Elmer Davis, Hugh Johnson and many others could never again express an opinion on a sponsored program?"

The N. A. B. code, while not yet a month old, has been rather widely approved by the press and public-minded organizations. The American Civil Liberties Union, for instance, sees no threat to free speech in it, but Gen. Johnson expressed the opinion that the broadcasters are "treading on dangerous ground."

The Federal Communications Commission is watching the controversy with interest but without comment as it was the commission's own threat of Government censorship a year ago that induced the broadcasters to draft their code of self-regulation.

People's Mandate Tourists Branded Communists

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Oct. 20 (AP).—A feminist tempest over communism greeted a group of prominent South American women making a good-will trip through the United States upon their arrival today.

Mrs. Charlotte L. Wilson, socially prominent Santa Fe club leader, in a letter, branded the good-will tour sponsor, the People's Mandate to End War, a Communist organization and a section of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, which she charged was organized by Communists and Socialists for the supercession of capitalism . . . by a new social international order."

"Ridiculous," answered Miss Mabel Vernon, director of the People's Mandate, who is accompanying the group. "Every plan for the tour was discussed with and approved by Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles."

Quaker Education

"Knowledge," wrote William Penn, "is the treasure, but judgment the treasurer of the wise man. He that hath more knowledge than judgment is made for another man's use rather than his own." This passage pretty well expresses the principle so long and so successfully applied in the educational activities of the Society of Friends.

Yesterday the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of those activities in America was celebrated in the old Arch Street Meeting House in Philadelphia. The foundation of the earliest Friends school in this country is not much later than that of the earliest Quaker settlements—a testimony to the vital place that education has always held in Quaker life.

It was natural enough that this least dogmatic of Christian groups, wherein each opinion is accorded equal toleration with another, should place such important emphasis on judgment or, as we might say nowadays, on "character." Thus in the Friends schools, as in the life of the Quaker communities, complete intellectual freedom was combined with a strict moral discipline. The whole educational program has consistently reflected the great Quaker values of simplicity, sobriety, democracy and practicality.

All this was religious rather than social in purpose. But hardly any educational system could have been better designed to fit the needs of the individualist American democracy of the nineteenth century. The Friends schools were widely admired and their methods and curricula widely imitated. They played an enormous part in shaping the free public school systems that gradually were established throughout the Nation.

This influence and prestige, so sharply disproportionate to the numerical strength of the society, has continued to the present day. In many respects the Friends schools remain models for private schools everywhere. This, of course, would not have been possible if Quaker educators had not been quick to recognize the changing necessities of changing times.

Long ago the original distinction between Friend and stranger in Quaker education was removed. And there is an eloquent tribute in the fact that in many Friends schools today no more than a small minority are children of members of the society.

Returning To Normal?

Secretary Morgenthau's opinion that the Government bond market is returning to "normal" raises the question as to what constitutes normality at the present time. To Mr. Morgenthau it apparently means that the nervousness following the outbreak of war in Europe has subsided and the danger of another sharp drop in Government bond prices is slight. Hence in a relatively stable market he looks forward to being able to refund notes maturing next December without difficulty.

However, it is apparent to the most superficial observer that the Government bond market is highly artificial. The selling that accompanied the outbreak of war caused a sharper drop in long-term Government bonds than it did in high-grade utilities and rails. To prevent prices from dropping too rapidly or too far, the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Banks were forced to buy heavily in the open market, the Federal Reserve system alone taking about $400,000,000 of Government issues within two weeks. Although these supporting operations arrested the decline and were followed by a partial recovery, quotations are lower than they were in August.

Easy money policies have facilitated the financing of huge recurrent deficits and, while the Government may permit bond prices to slide somewhat and interest rates to advance accordingly, there is little likelihood that market controls will be greatly relaxed. Indeed, it is impossible to see how they could be without endangering the solvency of our financial institutions, which hold billions of Government securities.

War in Europe is merely one of the disturbing factors that has to be taken into account in preparing the way for refunding operations and for new financing. Secretary Morgenthau is evidently relieved that the initial unsettlement growing out of the war has subsided. But it is only to this extent that we can be said to be reverting to more normal conditions in the market for Government bonds.

Now Really Encircled

The "encirclement" which Hitler so greatly feared before his decision to invade Poland is today much more of a reality than it was two months ago.

In part, this is because of the newly signed treaty between Turkey, Great Britain and France, whereby the Angora government pledges itself to join the western allies if there is any attack on either Greece or Rumania. This treaty is of the greatest diplomatic importance, blocking off further German expansion to the southeast and adding to the factors which tend to keep Italy neutral. But it is not merely in southeastern Europe that Germany is being hemmed in.

More striking, because more unexpected, is the Russian eruption into the Baltic Sea, an area in which the Soviet government exercised little influence prior to the outbreak of the present war. Now Moscow has established a virtual protectorate over Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania and is exerting a pressure on Finland so strong as to arouse extreme anxiety in all the Scandinavian nations.

As a result of this westward push by Russia, the Nazis have already lost one great advantage which was perhaps accidentally accorded Germany after the defeat of 1918. Even when demilitarized under the Treaty of Versailles, Germany was supreme in the Baltic area. Even when her coastline was cut by the Polish Corridor no other Baltic nation could challenge Germany's command of this vital inland sea.

That is true no longer. Today Russia's naval and air bases have been brought to the borders of East Prussia. Russian submarines are within easy cruising radius of every German Baltic port. And not many Nazis are so naive as to relish these gains at German expense by what their Fuehrer recently called "the subhuman forces of bolshevism."

To this must be added the fact that the Russian border is now again contiguous to that of Germany. And this will probably continue to be the case, so far as East Prussia is concerned, even if the German plan for reconstituting a part of Poland as a buffer state is carried out.

By land and sea and air Russia has closed in on Germany. The latent Slavic threat, so greatly feared by all German statesmen of the past, has been deliberately reconstituted by Adolf Hitler and Herr von Ribbentrop.

Now, emphasizing this situation to the east and north of Germany, comes the Turkish action, swinging the entire balance of power in the Balkan and Mediterranean areas to the side of the Allies.

The seriousness of this development for Germany is clearly revealed by the intense irritation and angry comment with which the development has been received in Berlin. The reasons for this reaction are clear. Rumanian resistance to German pressures will be greatly strengthened by the new Turkish guarantee. And the treaty also threatens Italy with a new and very dangerous enemy in the event that Mussolini should be tempted to go in on the German side.

Seven weeks of war, in other words, have witnessed a pronounced deterioration in Germany's diplomatic position. That country has lost its previously uncontested control of the Baltic. Russia has returned to her commanding position at Germany's back door. Italy, as an ally in reserve, has been practically immobilized. Balkan resistance to the Drang nach Osten has been effectively built up.

The easy conquest of Poland and the minor successes of the U-boats may still be the uppermost thoughts in the mind of the German public. But those who have the responsibility of the Reich in their keeping will realize that it is very easy to win a lot of tricks, yet lose the rubber. The German military arms, under their excellent professional leadership, have done all that anyone could expect. But German diplomacy, in the hands of bungling amateurs like Von Ribbentrop, is losing much more than the army has won.

Errors In The Margin

If the German Embassy actually protests to the Department of State over Miss Clare Booth's play, "Margin For Error," it will probably succeed in giving the play publicity of which it stands in much need.

As most Washingtonians know by now, this "satirical melodrama" centers around the murder of a Nazi consul. Recognizing that there is no Dr. Goebbels in our benighted scheme of things, the embassy indicates that it won't ask to have the play banned, but may just register an informal kick. In other words, the Fuehrer has long ears and it is just as well for a Nazi diplomat to have protests on the record if his fidelity to the party is ever called in question.

The embassy ought to realize, however, that a great many non-Nazis who witnessed "Margin For Error" considered "bad taste" the least of its faults. Many thought it plain bad. And unless a week's intensive rewriting can save it, Miss Boothe's latest product would seem destined to be part of Broadway's history in practically no time at all. But there is no telling what a Nazi protest, even an informal protest, could accomplish in the way of favorable publicity.

Perhaps the key to the diplomatic objection lies in the broadcast as part of the plot of one of Hitler's old speeches, which happens to contain some of his loudest denunciations of bolshevism and all its works. As the speech was in German, with fragmentary translations to the accompaniment of roared "Sieg Heil's," few of the audience got that subtle point.

Perhaps it was this to which Miss Boothe referred when she said of Washington audiences that: "They are right up to the minute on current events. But a line that has a touch of subtlety takes a few seconds to register with them."

We hope Miss Boothe was not judging us solely by reactions to "Margin For Error." For as far as subtlety is concerned "Margin For Error" isn't a very fair test of anybody's reactions.

Easier Shipping Curbs

Members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee responsible for drafting the neutrality bill are reported to have relaxed its shipping restrictions "as much as they dared at this time." That interpretation of the amendments approved by the majority of the committee shows a good deal of insight. It suggests that the authors of the bill are still strongly dissatisfied with the restraints imposed upon American shipping, but do not consider it expedient further to liberalize the measure at the present session.

The committee amendment is an attempt to eliminate absurd and unnecessary restraints in the bill without increasing the sphere in which the President might exercise discretion. American ships could continue their operations in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, the China and Arabian Seas and the Bay of Bengal, unless the President should declare any of these areas combat zones. In the Atlantic and Caribbean the ban on American shipping to belligerents would be made inapplicable to all Western Hemisphere ports south of St. Augustine, Fla.

Aircraft could continue to use all ports in the Western Hemisphere, including some that would be closed to surface vessels. But the Government would be forbidden to make any claim for losses resulting from the sinking of American ships taking advantage of these concessions.

Inconsistencies are inevitable under this attempt to write specific exemptions into the law. American ships could not touch a Canadian port on the Atlantic, but they would be able to maintain service to the Mediterranean. Airplanes could fly to Bermuda, but surface vessels would have to keep away. As the war progresses, these specific exemptions from the rigors of the shipping regulations may quickly become obsolete. Congress cannot possibly foresee what trend maritime warfare will take. So if the bill passes, with the proposed amendment, further changes may well seem essential at the outset of the 1940 session.

Majority Leader Barkley's address to the Senate on Thursday gives rise to the assumption that stringent shipping regulations are being retained to justify repeal of the arms embargo. Under the Administration's bill, he said, it would not be necessary to embargo arms to avoid war, for American ships would be kept out of danger zones regardless of what they carried. That argument, however, does not of itself justify shipping restrictions that will not stand the test of practical application.

Senator Thomas, of Utah, proposed to the committee that American shipping companies be allowed to operate at their own risk anywhere outside of war combat zones. If he had limited that proposed exemption to cargo ships carrying no passengers, it might have had a more favorable reception. Ultimately an amendment giving at least this much flexibility to shipping restrictions will probably have to be adopted. Congress will be more impressed with the desirability of limiting the shipping ban to actual combat zones when it is confronted, as it soon will be, with the necessity of compensating shipping companies and their discharged employes from losses resulting from a wholesale abandonment of service.

"Le Plus Ca Change . . . ."

From the Chicago Daily News.

"Peter the Great," filmed by the official Soviet artists, is showing at a local cinema, once a favorite haunt of Chicago's pinkos.

Five years ago a Russian movie director who proposed to make a picture glorifying a Czar would have been shot for counter-revolution. Two years ago Russian generals and commissars were facing firing squads for plotting to cooperate with Germany in exactly the manner that Stalin is now working with Hitler.

It's all very interesting, but more than that, it is Russian. That Stalin admires Peter the Great, and takes him as his model, is nothing to wonder at. Nor is it anything to condemn, from the Russian point of view.

A ruthless woman, Catherine II, was the greatest of all the "Czars," however, and now the former criminal and poet, Stalin, takes up where she left off.

Like Stalin, Catherine would work with anybody she could use. She was a patroness of Voltaire. She hired our own John Paul Jones to command her navy. His base was that very Tallinn, now capital of Estonia, the little nation that has just "granted" Stalin his coveted naval bases on the Baltic.

"Whatever Is, Is Right"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In evaluating the situation of the world today so many people overlook the fact that governing individuals are not responsible to contemporary times and peoples for what they do. Someone has to assume leadership; when all hold back confusion and stagnation result.

Thus, in 1914 no single individual should be blamed for the so-called World War. The event had to happen. There were too many people in Europe. Big families fill the world. Then natural law operates to reduce the number. Medical science steps in and upsets the question by perpetuating the weak and lengthening the span of life (not the length of life). Then war must again intervene to reduce the number, and so on ad infinitum.

A small family is the preventive of war. But the world is steadily drawing toward the ideal, as can be observed if events are taken as a whole. If this were not true as the centuries come and go, then the world would have destroyed itself long ago.

This all adds up to the proposition that whatever happens, happens for the best, or, as Alexander Pope said: "Whatever is, is right." At the present Hitler is destiny and is the world's greatest man. After Hitler will come the community state, as predicted by the Saviour, Himself the master Communist of all time, for true Communism and Christianity are interchangeable terms. The translation of these two terms reads: "The greatest good for the whole number." In the present stage of development we have the term: "The greatest good for the greatest number." OBSERVER.

Commends Crew

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let me add to your news article in The Post of October 17 about Miss Helen Crosby. I am sure Miss Crosby will concur with me.

The City of Flint reached the scene of the sinking on the morning of the 4th, instead of the 3d, as stated. The Athenia was torpedoed about 7:45 on the night of the 3d. Position: latitude 56° 42" N., longitude 14° 4" W. The Flint at that time was approximately 150 miles west of that position. The S O S was received by us around 8:50 p. m. The ship swung about immediately, proceeding with all speed possible to the scene of disaster, and transferred survivors from the Swedish yacht Southern Cross between 11 a. m. and 1:45 p. m., 223 all told.

I agree that Miss Crosby performed very commendable work and deserves a world of praise along with several other passengers and survivors. However, I think it would also be very appropriate for Admiral Land of the Maritime Commission to issue letters of commendation to the crew of the Flint who so willingly and cheerfully gave up their cabins, beds and clothing to the unfortunate survivors.

They performed their routine duties in running the ship, getting what rest they could at any place they could find to lie down. Some worked continuously for 17 to 18 hours per day daily in order to feed the vast throng. I may say that the City of Flint was only a freight ship with facilities for caring for a normal crew of 40 men. Under these circumstances I think the crew gallantly upheld the glorious traditions of the American merchant marine. What about it, Admiral Land, don't you agree. I am sure that Miss Crosby will.

War Strategy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If some of our legislators and radio strategists knew that both the Maginot and the Siegfried fortifications exceed in strength the Great Wall of China, Hadrian's Wall erected by the Romans against the Picts, and the Hindenburg line of the World War, all added together, they would understand something of the problems engaging the attention of both contesting forces on the Western Front.

When I was practicing law in Paris, in 1925, it was my privilege to meet Andre Maginot, minister of war, and former top sergeant in the French army during the war of 1914-18. This remarkable man, whose striking physical height of 5 feet 5 inches was matched by his superb mental stature, outlined to me some of the features of the concrete and steel chain of forts which he had promoted to shield "la belle France" from the invader.

He explained this system of 300 bristling death turrets buried in the earth, supplemented by armored chambers and underground railroads, and proved by thumbnail sketches and other details that the Maginot line is the closest physical illustration ever known of an irresistible object being able to overcome irresistible force.

The Maginot line links France's Belgian frontier with the Swiss border on a front of 150 miles, and cost in money $150,000,000. However expensive and skillful the Siegfried line built by the Germans to offset the French defense works may be, it is a safe calculation that it cannot be stronger or more intricate than the Maginot system. But an accurate comparison of these two systems of fortification is in the circumstances impossible. This much can be ventured, namely, that a mass assault by either side on the other's line would result in the greatest slaughter of human beings ever known in military history.

Both sides expect the fighting on the Western Front to end by the exhaustion of the weaker army rather than by the capture of fortifications. By "weaker army" I mean the side which will succumb from a combination of military, economic and political causes. Although I am strongly pro British and pro-French in the present conflict, to my mind the outcome of the war is by no means certain.

Debating Society

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Would you like some stock in a corporation whose directors argued for a month or more whether to ship freight by train or truck, or whether to permit delivery of goods already bought and paid for, or whether or not 2 and 2 equaled 4?

The writer once dropped into the meeting of a country debating society. The issue was: "Resolved, that pursuit is more pleasurable than possession." Six speakers lined up for each side. The first speaker for the affirmative said: "For instance, you go rabbit hunting; you have a lot of fun in the chase; that's pursuit. When you catch the rabbit, what you got? Got yourself full of fleas; that's possession." Each of the other five affirmative speakers said the same thing, and each one had'at his own wit and originality.

As for neutrality in the present situation, it is getting to be one big joke. There are scarcely any who are mentally neutral, and circumstances make it impossible to be entirely neutral in any event, considered from a hair-splitting basis, which is all poppycock. The sensible and safest thing to do is to sell anything to all comers with the cash and prohibit our ships and people to enter the zones of combat. E. M. PETERSON.

Stables In Residential Neighborhoods

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the zoning regulations now stand, section 3 thereof gives express permission for the erection of stables in residential districts. The limitations imposed upon such erection are inconsequential.

Paragraph of subsection (b) of section 3 of the zoning regulations permits the erection in a residential district as an accessory building to a residence when located on the same lot and not involving a conduct of a business on the premises of

"(b) A private stable not less than 50 feet back from the front building line of such lot and opening upon a public alley."

Note that the regulations do not provide for any notice and hearing, any opportunity for protest; do not establish any minimum distances from neighboring dwellings, but merely require that the stable be not less than 50 feet from the front building line of the dwelling.

It is very simple to meet these requirements. Hampshire Heights Citizens Association had this experience:

One of the neighbors wished to keep and did keep a horse in his garage. He was persuaded by a delegation of the neighbors to remove the animal. However, had he wished to exercise his legal rights, the use of a garage for such purpose would have been expressly condoned by the zoning regulations, since it would open on a public alley and be more than 50 feet back from the front building line of the lot.

The fact that there are very few stables today increases rather than lessens the actual damage done to those whose property is affected. As a result, a gross discrimination in value against the property of the person so affected is inevitable.

Many people who would have no objection to living next door to a store, an apartment house or a row house would not under any circumstances run the risk of living next to a stable. It is all very well to say that, constructed of the proper materials and with the proper manure pits, a stable might from an engineering standpoint be sanitary, but the fact remains that its mere existence would be sufficient to deter many purchasers from taking the gamble.

People purchasing in residential neighborhoods have relied upon the zoning restrictions as a guarantee that the character of the neighborhood would be compatible with the establishment of the home. Few citizens realize that there still exists today the legal right to erect the type of building which was outmoded years ago, a building whose erection would destroy the resale value of their property and yet to which no minimum distance requirements from the neighboring dwellings, no right of hearing, notice or opportunity for protest is given.

It seems contrary to the very spirit and purpose of the zoning regulations, therefore, to permit one property owner an unqualified right to render substantially valueless for resale purposes the property of others without any proportionate benefit to himself or other urgent necessity therefor.

Sweet Charity

Season in and season out, Capital social climbing is done to music. You may not know Wagner from Verdi or Schumann from Chopin, but if you want to be seen at the right places, you are simply "devoted to music" from November until time to get away from it all.

This winter you can be different. You can roll bandages. Or you can knit your way up. Both are being done with a fervor that puts to shame all other lady bountiful causes; not that all knitting and rolling are performed with an eye to social implications, but either is a wonderful way to meet the Best People . . . and gather gossip.

"And, my dear, one feels one really should do something—doesn't one?" This theme bubbles up from seas of sable wherever ladies meet these days. I heard it a dozen times across a tea table yesterday. The befurred and be-diamonded dowager who sat next to me went into details. Her bandage class met the next day. Wouldn't I join her? Everybody was doing it ("My dear, simply everybody," she insisted). Nearly all the embassies and legations had somebody in the group. You met such fascinating people. Heard such interesting things. Learned so much about everything that was going on. And everybody.

I declined. My bandaging bit was done in the last war. I was patriotic with a vengeance . . . and learned afterward that a good two-thirds of all surgical dressings turned out by our unit had to be redone or discarded entirely.

I knitted and felt noble, too. Three hours a morning, four times a week my needles flew in and out of a sweater that could have been stretched from the Seine to the Rhine with no trouble at all. The social leader who instructed our unit sent her first sweater straight to her brother at the front. He was touched. Deeply touched. What her dear hands had turned out he hadn't the heart to drag through the mud of the trenches. So he tenderly put away her sweater, brought it home after the war, and gave it to his 7-year-old son. It fit perfectly.

In still another unit, my set did socks. Only socks. Years later I heard a soldier say most of the hand-knit socks he got could better have been used for duffle bags.

In my wartime enthusiasm, I took over a junior knitting corps, too. Taught them how to do those dainty 6-by-6-inch squares for coverlets to keep the doughboys warm while they saved the world for democracy. That little unit that got half-holidays from school for its "war work", finally finished enough squares for a dozen coverlets. We bundled them up and carried them proudly over to our town's central knitting unit. Row on row, those neat bundles were stacked in a store room—to be sent to the front later, so the director said. A decade later I discovered there was no demand for those squares, or finished coverlets either. They are still stacked in that store room. Well, we knitted some fancy meals for moths, anyway.

So I've learned my lesson. At this point I don't feel I've simply "got to do something." Let those who feel otherwise work themselves into a perfect lather in the name of nobility, patriotism, democracy, or what have you; and make a lot of work for somebody else. Let debutantes and dowagers smile sweetly at the camera over their bandaging and feel it's all for charity, and our country and our principles. Let them gather their gossip as they choose. I'll try to do my bit in some other direction.

Maybe I've heard too much talk from the wrong people. I have been told that a good 50 per cent of the surgical dressings turned out in socially-conscious Capital units today couldn't be used at all. I have heard that one machine in one hour can roll more bandages than 50 average women working a week. Someone dropped a hint recently that it would be fine if a few of these sublimely patriotic ladies would do some social sewing on refugee garments—which are needed, and needed badly. "But," this person added, "they all insist on doing surgical dressings. It seems so much more patriotic."

Well, it's the season's best way to be seen with the smart set. You meet and mingle where it counts; and you certainly know what's going on. And you work ("oh, my dear, how you work"); and you come away from it all in a glow of self-satisfaction, feeling too worthwhile to live.

Some call it social consciousness. I do. SALLY SWIFT.

"Why Delay?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While sipping my coffee this morning I looked out of the window at some 20 or more sparrows busily engaged in eating some broken pieces of bread that had been thrown out of the window upstairs by a kind lady. Then my thoughts turned to Europe.

I thought of the terrible bombs and fires that destroyed the great city of Warsaw, the countless thousands of women and children that had been killed, and the thousands of others lying in hospitals, the disease and pestilence that is following in the wake of that terrible destruction wrought by a ruthless dictator for what?

Then my thoughts returned to the last session of the United States Senate, and I wondered if it was not entirely responsible for this act when we gave aid and comfort to this madman, this maniac, by refusing to revise our embargo act. I think we were responsible, and I am equally sure we will not make that mistake now. But why delay? Why not act at once? For the sake of mercy and kindness let us not give him more encouragement to continue his murderous course.

New Bolshevism Plan

THE TWO LITTLE home-made constitutional knickknacks which the people of Ohio will vote upon November 7—one providing old-age pensions which may cost twice the entire present State revenues, the other proposing to retire the Legislature—are pre-operative pain-killers to prepare the State for confiscation and bolshevism.

The pension proposal provides for payments to persons over 60 and, although it is incoherent in spots, nevertheless its intent is clear on one point. It holds that one particular group, in this case an age group, is entitled to a division of the property of those who have saved, inherited or otherwise acquired some. Those who want a share of their neighbors' possessions may award themselves that share by popular vote and collect it through taxation.

This is a little different from the familiar purpose of taxation. The taxes would not be used for the maintenance of the State. The State would have no claim on the money and get no share of it. The State would act only as collector and turn the money over to a preferred group, and even the costs of collection would be borne by the victims.

Age Minimum Might Be Even 30

BUT THERE IS nothing to restrict this benefit to persons over 60 or to limit the payments to the amounts proposed.

The age minimum might be reduced to 50, 40 or 30 or just eliminated altogether. The payments might be $500 a month. Lump sums of $5,000 could be voted to members of groups or to all hands. Poverty or need is no requirement. Some bug-hunters believe that in the present proposal aged individuals who are receiving retirement pensions for service as teachers, policemen and soldiers, for example, would be ineligible, but they are mistaken.

It makes no difference that an elderly couple are receiving an income of $10,000 a year from investments or inheritance or from a daughter who married Tommy Manville. They are still eligible or, anyway, the old gentleman is, provided he retires from a wage-earning occupation. He may still earn a big income as a lawyer, doctor, banker, speculator, capitalist-farmer or merchant. Fees, commissions and profits are not wages. As to mamma's eligibility there is some doubt. If she always has been a home body, apparently she is out, but if she ever earned wages, even for a week, however long ago, she is "retired" from gainful occupation as a "wage-earner" and is in.

Need Is No Basis For Qualification

THE AGE LIMIT, as I have mentioned, is arbitrary, movable and eliminable—if such a word there be, as, if there isn't, there ought. Everybody is eligible theoretically, regardless of age, wealth, poverty or necessity, and the ultimate possibility is that everybody may be voted a share of all the property, capital and income in Ohio.

At this point a curtain will be drawn over the unmannerly spectacle of the whole population of a proud and enlightened American State throwing everything up for grabs, and we will unzip the No. 2 amendment and see what is in it.

This one is a liberalization or frustration of the initiative and referendum which was adopted with deep solemnity about 1913 and was regarded as a beautiful reform.

At present, to place on the ballot a proposal to amend the constitution or to enact a law, the initiators must obtain about a quarter of a million signatures, subject to verification, of citizens residing in at least 44 of the 88 counties. These provisions were adopted very deliberately to prevent frivolous or cunning abuse of the great reform.

Amendment No. 2 Helps Petitioners

IT IS FOR the voters to say on November 7 whether these restrictions are too tight, impose too much expense on advocates of popular reforms who lack financial backing and, defeat democracy. The new proposal would reduce to 100,000 the number of signatures required to place on the ballot a proposal to amend the constitution, and to 50,000 the number necessary to submit a proposed law. Moreover, it would permit the people of any one big city or populous district, with a special, local or group interest, to provide all of the signatures. The petitioner wouldn't even have to know his legal voting address. He would only have to know his street number, if any, or the name of his road and his city or township.

The meaning of this is that the advocates of the amendment are just sick and tired of the legislative process, which, by parliamentary methods, political trickery and sometimes by the exercise of intelligence, defeats a variety of proposals ranging from the wise to the crazy and crooked, and, by the same token, sometimes ratifies measures of like character and in like proportion.

They have been hearing again about the democracy of the old New England town meeting, and they mean to run Ohio by one vast, incoherent town meeting of the State. It is this item on the ballot which would permit the submission of the real grab-bag proposals to popular vote, such as pensions of $100 a week for tired young men of 30 or the $5,000 grubstake for each citizen, payable out of all there is as long as it lasts.

Nothing stands between the people and all this except the final and most reliable democratic defense, the will of the people themselves.

Today And Tomorrow

Toward Peace In Half The World

THE WAR in Europe has brought about a new situation in the Far East, and it may be possible to find in it the opportunity to contribute greatly to the general security and peace. It is worth our closest attention. For while the Senate neutrality bill would make it as certain as it can be made by legislation that the United States will not participate in the present European war between Britain, France and Germany, the matter would not be so simple if the European war became a world war with Japan as an active belligerent.

The fact that the European war is not a world war, the fact that it is now possible and probable that the war can be localized in Europe, is by all odds the surest guarantee of American neutrality. What we had reason to fear last July was a war in which Germany, Italy and Japan struck simultaneously in the Atlantic, the Mediterranean and the Pacific; in such a war it would have been exceedingly difficult not to become involved, and it would have been a very serious question whether the United States could have afforded to remain neutral in a war which might have left us to face alone a victorious alliance between Japan and the axis. This threat has not materialized. And so, because the war is in fact a radically different war from the one that we had reason to anticipate last summer, we can say now with a confidence we could not have felt in July that the United States can and will remain neutral.

Japanese-Soviet Agreement Possible

BUT THOUGH the outlook is far better than it was, it would be imprudent to take anything for granted. It is by no means impossible that Japan and Russia could reach an agreement like that between Germany and Russia, and then unloose the Japanese navy for a campaign of aggression in the western Pacific. Such a campaign would put in dire peril not only American citizens and American interests in the coastal cities of China, but it would threaten most dangerously the Dutch islands, and increase enormously the risks of our continuing entanglement in the Philippines. We have every reason, therefore, for trying to improve radically our relations with Japan.

If this can possibly be done, it should certainly be done, and the speech delivered in Tokyo on Thursday by Ambassador Grew after his return from Washington ought to be regarded in Japan and in the United States as public notice that our relations will become much worse unless they are soon made much better. The candor with which Mr. Grew expressed the American feeling about Japan should be regarded not as a move to provoke a crisis but as a move to prevent a crisis from developing.

What, then, is this new situation in the Far East? It has been created by the Hitler-Stalin pact, which, having precipitated the European war, now shapes its peculiar character.

The Japanese have been quick to see that in a war with Russia they can no longer obtain help from Germany. But Russia is the only power in Asia that can threaten Japan, and as Stalin returns to the imperial policy of czarist Russia, it is evident that Japan must more than ever look to her own safety. As if to emphasize this point, it now appears that, though Stalin has made a truce with Japan in Mongolia and has stopped fighting the Japanese directly, he has promised greatly to increase his military assistance to the Chinese.

China Becomes Dependent On Soviet

MOREOVER, China has now become almost entirely dependent on Stalinist Russia. For Britain and France have no surplus resources with which to help China fight a war. Above all, they cannot afford to add to their enemies by antagonizing the Japanese. On the other hand, the effect of the European war is to make Japan more than ever economically dependent upon the United States. For two-thirds of Japan's exports are to the British Empire and the United States, and more than half of her imports are from these two powers. War is certain to reduce drastically Japanese trade with Britain, leaving the United States as Japan's only important customer and her most important source of supplies. But Japan's trade with the United States is threatened; the commercial treaty is abrogated, and an embargo against Japan is a serious possibility.

Neither for Japan nor ourselves is the situation a good one. The Japanese face the prospect of becoming weaker as against Russia because of the exhausting war which Russia can enable the Chinese to wage. The Japanese face the prospect of a Russia that is greatly strengthened by her political gains in Europe, and perhaps economically improved by German technicians and organizers. They face the rise of an American embargo arising out of hostility to the Chinese policy.

But for the United States this is also a bad prospect. Great as is our sympathy with China, we can hardly wish to see China become the military partner of Stalinist Russia. Nor can we wish to see the Soviets undermine Japan and establish themselves as the dominant power in Asia. Nor can we look with anything but dismay upon the idea of letting an embargo drive things from bad to worse in our relations with Japan. For that is the road to what might well become a world war.

Japanese Seek Better Solution

FINALLY, we have to remember that if things become sufficiently desperate for Japan, there is another solution always conceivable. This is a solution like that which Hitler adopted in central Europe, to come to terms with Russia by agreeing to a partition of China, and even possibly of Asia, and then to unite with Germany and Russia in order to drive the western powers out of the Far East. Such a policy might find more popular support in China itself than we like now to believe is possible.

There is reason to think that the Japanese would prefer to find a better solution, and that surely is our interest as well. Perhaps the best path to explore is that indicated by Prof. A. Whitney Griswold, of Yale, in an article in the November issue of the magazine Asia. It is in brief that the need to negotiate a new commercial treaty in place of that which expires in January might be made the occasion for a far-reaching settlement of Japanese-American differences. Nothing could be more worth attempting. For a real settlement with Japan would stabilize peace in half the world, and go far toward making it certain that the present war remains strictly localized in Europe.

Ostrich Method

Hiding From Danger

WITHIN TEN DAYS or so the Senate is going to adopt the cash-and-carry neutrality bill. America wants it, overwhelmingly. To the cash-and-carry plan there has been practically no objection. In the Senate debate both sides have been agreed upon cash-and-carry—the dispute has been about the separate matter of embargo on arms.

America thinks the new neutrality measure is the best course for us in a world bedeviled by war. Maybe it is, but this column cannot pretend to share the comforting belief that much of America entertains, the optimistic conviction that as soon as we adopt the new neutrality measure, everything will be settled and we can go our ways secure; we can sleep well o' nights. At least we ought to look the facts in the face; we ought to understand what we are doing.

The new measure means that we attempt to achieve neutrality, to keep our own Nation at peace, by putting restrictions on our own citizens. To our citizens we say, you must not send ships to any country at war. More than that, we say you must not send ships to any country in Europe, even a neutral country. For the "combat area," the waters which we forbid our ships to enter, will probably include all the waters of western and southern Europe. We cannot send ships even though they carry the most innocent goods, a cargo of Bibles, for example. To our citizens we say, you must not sell any goods of any kind to any nation at war, nor to any citizen of any nation at war, except for cash; you cannot lend money to any nation at war nor buy its bonds nor deal in them.

We Give Up Rights Guaranteed By Law

NOW, WITH slight qualifications, every one of those prohibitions, put by our own Government upon our own citizens, is a denial of rights possessed by our citizens, even in wartime. Under international law, covering wartime conditions, every citizen of every neutral country has a right, with some qualifications about blockade, to do all the things which our proposed neutrality measure forbids our citizens to do.

What we are doing is to abandon rights assured to us by international law from time immemorial. We abandon them for ourselves also, of course. But by abandoning these rights for ourselves, we weaken them for all neutrals. When the strongest neutral, the strongest nation in the world, waives neutral rights, smaller nations are not likely to stand up for them. We are weakening the whole spirit of neutral rights, undermining the integrity of the very idea that neutrals have rights. We seem to assent to the idea that belligerents can do what they please, that belligerents can have sole use of the sea for their fighting.

"Assent" is not the right word. We do not assent to the idea, we invent the idea. No belligerent claims, or ever claimed, that it has a right to exclude all neutral ships from the sea.

Refusal Of Strong To Face Danger

THE ESSENTIAL spirit of this neutrality measure of ours—how shall we express it? It is not confession of weakness, for we are not weak. It is a refusal of the strong to stand upon its strength, and upon its rights. It is a concession by the peace-wishing to the war-making. It is an attempt to achieve safety by refusing to face danger, by hiding from danger. Is that really the best way for a strong nation to escape danger?

However, this column says no more than to express disquiet whether our neutrality measure will do as much as we fondly expect. Maybe it will work; let us hope so. But when one observes the placidity with which many of our people assume that this neutrality measure will take us through safely, this column recalls some other devices in which we had a confidence equally complacent.

Four years ago we passed a neutrality law even more self-denying than the proposed one. That earlier law, going farther than the proposed one, forbade absolutely what the proposed law permits partially. It forbade absolutely the sale of arms, while the present law permits sale on the cash-and-carry plan. We thought that 1935 neutrality law was wonderful—it passed the House by 353 to 27, and the Senate without even demand for a rollcall.

A Strong Navy Is Best Course

THAT SAME LAW, substantially, we again adopted in 1937, by 63 to 6 in the Senate, 376 to 13 in the House. Everybody thought our neutrality was assured. (Except perhaps those tiny minorities in Congress.) President Roosevelt in his 1936 campaign congratulated the country, and himself. But last month Mr. Roosevelt felt obliged to say, in his opening message to Congress: "I regret that the Congress passed that act: I regret equally that I signed that act."

It is precisely to replace that old neutrality measure, once thought to be just what was needed, that we are now passing the cash-and-carry measure, which in the perennial optimism of the human animal, we again think is just what is needed.

But if there be disquiet about our neutrality policy, there need be none about another of our policies. For the United States, the best way to defend our neutrality and preserve our peace is to have an extremely strong Navy. The best way to avoid war is to have a Navy so strong that no nation will provoke us to war. This course, happily, we are following.

A Tribute To Dr. John Dewey

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Oct. 20.—While Dr. John Dewey, professor of philosophy at Columbia University and leader of the progressive education movement in the United States, passed his eightieth birthday today at the farm of his daughter in Greencastle, Mo., more than 800 educators, including representatives of 70 universities, gathered tonight at the Hotel Pennsylvania to celebrate the event and receive a message from the philosopher.

The banquet part of the two-day national convention of the Progressive Education Association, was highlighted by an unexpected address by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia. Arriving just as the program was getting under way, the mayor said that he wanted the opportunity to pay tribute "to a great man while he is still alive." More than at any other time, he added, the country was in need of Prof. Dewey's patience and his liberal philosophy.

Prof. Dewey's message, read by Dr. Horace M. Kallen, of the new school for social research, was a reiteration of his previous pleas for a "moral and human" type of democracy.

"Democracy is now as important an issue as 150 years ago when it was created in America," the message read. "When it was created, it was a natural, almost inevitable, product of the pioneer type of life. But at present our frontier is moral, rather than physical, and our unused resources are human, rather than material. That is why we now have to create by deliberate, determined endeavor the kind of democracy which in its origin was a gift of grace and the product of fortunate conditions."

Free Gatherings The Heart Of Democracy

FREE GATHERINGS on the street corners, Prof. Dewey concluded, were the heart and final guarantee of democracy.

Prof. William Heard Kilpatrick, of Teachers College, said that Prof. Dewey's two greatest contributions were that he "revived the common sense outlook and brought back that type of psychology which is based on a life of action."

Other speakers, all of whom spoke on their recollections of Prof. Dewey, were Dr. Charles A. Beard, visiting professor at Columbia University; Mrs. Eugene Meyer, wife of the publisher of The Washington Post, and Hu Shih, Chinese Ambassador to the United States.

Prof. Charles A. Beard, who returned to Columbia this year after resigning from the faculty in 1917 following a dispute over academic freedom, spoke of his long association with the philosopher and of the inspiration which he had derived from it. He praised Prof. Dewey for his life-long devotion to liberalism and labeled him "the father of progressive education."

Prof. Boyd Bode, of Ohio State University, acted as toastmaster, and introduced the guests of honor. Among those present, in addition to Mr. Dewey's son, Frederick, and other relatives, were James Rowland Angell, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, J. McKeen Cattell, Morris R. Cohen, William A. Neilson, Herbert W. Schneider and Carleton Washburne. Prof. Bode read a long list of congratulatory messages which had come from educational institutions throughout the United States.

DR. JOHN DEWEY

Mrs. Meyer's tribute to Dr. Dewey follows:

THIS IS AN OPPORTUNITY for which I have been waiting half a lifetime. For with so many sympathetic friends to support me, I at last find the courage to confess to Dr. Dewey what I have never dared to mention, what there has never been any room for, in the midst of our objective talks on recreation, philosophy or politics—namely, that I have a boundless affection for him and, although his thought has been a major influence on my life and actions, I actually love him for his generosity of spirit, for his inexhaustible patience, and for his unfailing kindness. I am reminded of the Chinese belief that great character is even rarer than talent, and that character combinded with imaginative insight is the highest manifestation of human genius.

Thirty-odd years ago, when I had the good fortune to come under Dr. Dewey's influence as a college student, we lived in a happy-go-lucky world. Democracy was still our unquestioned hope, and the only bombs that fell were the intellectual ones that Dr. Dewey was dropping on the educational field. In those serene days we thought of our great teacher as the severest critic of democracy because every exposition which he gave of its boundless possibilities indicated how far we actually were from realizing them. Today when democracy is on the defensive, we think of him as its chief bulwark, as the source of a quiet but unshakable confidence in its future.

His Philosophy Pointed To A Way Of Life

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, if I have any reason for being in this distinguished company of speakers, it is to remind you that John Dewey's philosophy does not belong exclusively to the scholar and the educator, but to the layman as well. For his philosophy leads one inevitably to seek a way of life, a way of democratic living, whereby we can find our own individualities through active participation in the life of the community.

Those of us who entered public service under Dr. Dewey's influence did so with a conviction learned from him that the processes of democracy constitute in themselves the most fundamental source of education. We had no illusions about making America over. On the contrary, our belief was that America would make us over. We were in all humility trying to find out what democracy is. And the result which he had taught us to expect came into being. For we learned that the secret of democracy is what it does to the individual human being and that the individual can be of use to democracy only to the extent that it has transformed him into a socialized member of the community. We learned, furthermore, that all growth and all real education resulted from that continuous reconstruction of experience that is possible only in a democracy. We learned patience as well, because we saw that democracy can never develop more rapidly than individual experience.

But if we were not overconfident when democracy was the synonym of progress, neither can we be dismayed or discouraged now that democracy is being challenged by ideologies from the right and left. For these ideologies are a temporary expedient to meet temporary difficulties. And if the pupil of John Dewey has learned anything, it is that democracy is essentially timeless, that it is eternally youthful, and that life in a democracy is a continuous beginning afresh. These ideologies give only dogmatic answers to the complexities of a changing world, and their adherents can only react with vicious spasms to the successive problems that confront them. But democracy is education, growth—it is the only form of government in which human nature can come into its own. Democracy is not only change but it must hold change in stability as a constant ideal. Nor can it ever be permanently corrupted, for its very fluidity will always wash it clean as flowing water cleanses itself through its own motion.

Democracy Confronts The Future Unafraid

WITH THAT FAITH one can look into the future unafraid. The ordeal before us may be a severe one, but the outcome will be commensurate with the effort we are forced to make in order to survive it.

If we are able to confront the present crisis, not with hastily constructed answers, not with specious battle cries, but with a reasoned faith in the possibilities of our future, we owe it to the leadership of John Dewey. He taught us to appreciate the nature of freedom and started us upon the strenuous, unending but exhilarating struggle that is involved in the search for it. He intensified life for us by revealing that moral and spiritual values are not an inner abstraction but emerge gradually out of social behavior. He turned our attention away from a youthful preoccupation with self, and focused our eyes upon the outer world and our fellow men. He helped us to understand through actual experience the truth contained in the words that he who would gain his life must lose it. If in a remote and untroubled era John Dewey gave us direction and purpose, it is not surprising that in the present tumult his quiet voice still rises above the din of battle to give us peace of mind, courage and the well-grounded hope that humanity will yet build a better and a saner world.

What? No Football Furore?

Harvard, Yale and Princeton still profess to want football kept pretty quiet. The less said about it the better, is the attitude expressed in the revised "Big Three Code." From the showing made on the gridiron by them in the last few years maybe they're right.

"The matter of publicity shall be subject to constant supervision and study," says the Big Three agreement, "in an effort to lessen undue emphasis upon athletics in general and football in particular." This puts a college football publicity man in a spot where he can be fired for being too good.

We knew the "Big Three" stood for brain above brawn, scholarship over the ten-yard gain and the perfect examination paper above broken field running, but this is the first time we knew they rated a dull press agent over a smart backfield.

Imagine a publicity chief being under constant study and supervision to make sure that he doesn't get too much stuff into the newspapers!

"Well, how's the Harvard team coming?" the sports editor asks the Crimson press department.

"Sh-h-h!" comes the startled reply. "Not so loud. Someone might hear us."

"I hear you have an all-American prospect in the backfield this season," presses the writer.

"Now lissen," cautions the publicity man, "Don't even hint at a thing like that. Do you wanna get me into trouble?"

You can even imagine the publicity men at these three universities peering nervously through the windows, catching a glimpse of football writers approaching the building and exclaiming in terror, "Football writers from the metropolitan press! Let's hide!"

A long cheer for team—
Now, altogether, boys . . .
A long cheer for team—
But don't make too much noise!

Or the boys at the Harvard stadium imploring:

Sis! Boom! Bah!
That's too noisy
Just say "Ah!"

Oh, for the days when Yale, Harvard and Princeton had the Snevlins, the Hogans, the Coys, the Hefflefingers, the Poes, the Whites and the Brickleys and were proud of 'em. Oh, for the days when it was O. K. to surround the team with glamour, build up the new quarterback and make the fleet end a national figure if possible! Oh, for the days when no college publicity man had to be afraid he would talk too much!

But, on second thought, scrap that paragraph. The big colleges don't really mean it. The "constant supervision of football publicity" will be dropped the minute they develop some all-American material. Wanna bet?

The British naval authorities seem so far behind the comprehension of modern warfare that there is a story that, at the first news of the Scapa Flow disaster, the admiralty ordered, "Get hold of Nelson and demand all the details!"

Two ships carrying 231,000 cases of aged Scotch whisky are on the high seas and fears are expressed that the U-boats may sink 'em. "The Germans wouldn't dare do it," says P. H. T. "It would turn the whole world against 'em."

Lindbergh's Mind 'Hardened,' Says His English Host

London, Oct. 20.—Harold Nicholson, Liberal M. P. in whose house Col. Charles H. Lindbergh stayed during his exile in this country, defended the colonel's right to say what he liked about Canada's part in the European war and explained to England how fame and tragedy have "hardened Lindy's mind."

In an article in the Spectator, Nicholson says that in his struggle to remain simple after his historic flight to France, Lindbergh's "simplicity became muscle bound; his virility of ideal became not merely inflexible but actually rigid; his self-confidence thickened into arrogance; and, his convictions hardened into granite."

It is time, Nicholson says, that Lindbergh was impressed by the German air force. "Like most aviators," he wrote, "Col. Lindbergh was certain any modern war will be settled in the air. He was shown all the more modern types of German airplanes and given full facilities to observe their pilots practicing. He became convinced that both in men and pilots the Germans possessed the mightiest air force in the world."

Hoffman Sees A Modern Delilah In Miss Perkins

By the Associated Press

Representative Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, described Secretary of Labor Perkins as "a modern Delilah" yesterday and said she gave Elmer F. Andrews a haircut.

Andrews recently resigned as wage-hour administrator, and there were reports that he and Miss Perkins had disagreed.

Hoffman criticized Miss Perkins' handling of the Labor Deartment, saying:

"Since that lady has been working down there, the Communists have had full sway."

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 20.—Col. Josef Beck, former Polish foreign minister, is reported to be seriously ill in Brasov, the Rumanian health resort where he was interned with other members of the old government.

Beck, who suffered from frequent colds and lung troubles, has had two attacks. Specialists have found a return of tubercular tendencies. Former Commerce Minister Antoni Roman, who is interned in the same house, has had a heart attack.

Col. Beck's health was said to have been affected by the hardships of his journey across Poland to Rumania and also by depression caused by the defeat and failure of his policies.

Ship That Downed Clement Reported Sunk by British

Copyright by New York Times.

Buenos Aires, Argentina, Oct. 20. It is reported in diplomatic circles here that the Booth liner Clement was sunk by the German steamship Schwabenland, formerly used as a floating refueling base for German air mail planes flying between Germany and South America. It was originally reported that the Clement was sunk by the German pocket battleship Admiral von Scheer.

The new version that it was the Schwabenland that destroyed the liner was brought here by sailors. They also report that the Schwabenland was sunk a few days later by a British cruiser. The cruiser is reported to have taken off the crew of the Schwabenland, as well as the captain and first officer of the Clement, who were taken prisoners by the German raiders. According to this report, the Germans who boarded the Clement wore Von Scheer ribbons on their hats.

Cardplaying Decline Seen in Tax Figures

Treasury officials wondered yesterday whether war news and more active business are taking up so much of John Q. Public's time that he has little left to play cards.

The monthly Treasury analysis of excise tax receipts showed increased collections on every item except playing cards. The September total for all items was $272,085,446, or $94,430,251 more than in September, 1938.

Got a Runner?
Bureau Tests Hosiery

A Tricky little machine that reduces the most vicious qualities of a bramble patch to the scale of scientific measurement is being used out at the Bureau of Standards to test women's stockings.

Its job, scientists explained, is to determine the "snagging resistance" of various types of stocking thread, to the end that trimly clad legs shall remain unmarred after contact with protruding nails, splintery furniture, high weeds and briars.

Development of the machine, the Commerce Department said, "permits manufacturers of hosiery to determine with exactitude the factors which are of importance in manufacturing a stocking as near snag-resistant as possible with the present type of hosiery construction."

Snagging, which causes more runs than almost anything else, and is for that reason the daily headache for thousands of women, can be reduced by twisting the hosiery threads, according to the machine tests, officials explained.

Essentials of the machine are a sharp point, and a gauge to measure its length. After the machine works out on several kinds of stockings, the results, in runs and tears, are recorded in terms of an arbitrary "snag resistance" index.

The machine was developed by the National Association of Hosiery Manufacturers and the Bureau of Standards, during five years of research, and is now being patented. The patent will belong to the Unted States for free use by any manufacturer.

Tammany Finds Way to Get Out the Vote, With Girl as District Aide

New York, Oct. 20

AS YOU PROBABLY know, the society of Tammany has been neither successful nor happy in the past few years. This marvelous political machine which ran the city of New York for many years finally succumbed to the bludgeon blows of the new organization headed by Fiorello La-Guardia, who is now well along in his second term as the best mayor this town ever had.

ALICE HUGHES

But Tammany is not dead; she only sleepeth. Only the other day the citizens got a terrific wallop out of a new factor injected into Tammany politics—a young and pretty girl in a position of responsibility. Her name is Winifred O'Leary, she is 26 years old and has been appointed coleader of an assembly district down on the East Side. Most Irish-Americans in that neighborhood are interested in politics and Winifred has been spending her evenings doing political work in her district. During the day she is private secretary to a publishing firm.

Tammy has certainly injected sex in politics in a very colorful way. Winifred is exceptionally pretty, with a lovely skin, naturally curly dark hair, blue-gray eyes and teeth that would be the envy of any Hollywood actress. As is quite proper in her part of town, her chief interest is in better housing for her district.

Little Bette Davis is spending her time very quietly here in town, having asked time off from her studio to do a play. I hope she gets it, because last year she ground out no less than four arduous pictures—all good—but far too much of a strain on Hollywood's best actress, and if you want to make anything of that, please do so.

Coutourier Royce Brings Talent to U. S.

Predicts America Will Become Fashion Mecca of World

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

AS PROOF that the most distinguished and versatile coutouriers of the continent are flocking to these shores, we have just seen, not only the winter collection of gowns by Oldric Royce, but have met the designing gentleman himself.

The name of Royce may not mean as much to the average American women as, say that of Schiaparelli, but to the quietly assured "great lady" of Europe, it is the key to her smart wardrobe.

For more than 15 years private coutourier to the most exacting clientele of Prague and Paris, Oldric Royce just recently has succumbed to the tempting offers of New York and brought with him his talent for unusual, prophetic fashion design. He is now affiliated with a Manhattan designing house and just this last week presented his first American collection of gowns to a group of women at a local store.

This slight, dapper young man has dressed such European celebrities as the Duchess of Manchester, the Marahani of Baroda and Mme. Hersma de Vyth, wife of the former Netherlands Ambassador to Washington.

Prominent silhouettes in Oldric Royce's collection of elegant daytime and formal fashions were European national influences, such as his "Whirling Dervish," an animated two-tiered evening silhouette; "Tricolor," a costume implying its vivid name; "Her Royal Highness," with its genteel English refinement, and "Carlotta," a dashing suit with a Latin influence.

Mr. Royce insists that America will rule supreme through this trying wartime period as fashion mecca of the world, with great European designers like Balenciaga eventually designing exclusively for aristocratic American customers.

Gold Mesh and Green Suede

Mary Haworth's Mail

Mother Is Venomously Opposed to 24-Year-Old Man's Court of Her 16-Year-Old Daughter; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a problem that I would like your help in solving. I hope it doesn't sound too silly and I will state it as briefly as possible. I am 24 years old and very much in love with a girl who is 16 years old. She is very much in love with me, too, but the trouble is with her mother, who will have none of it. She won't even let me see the girl. She says I am too old for her; that I should leave children alone.

I have written a couple of love letters to this girl and her mother got hold of both of them. She threatens all sorts of things—to kill herself, have me fired from my job and such things. The only times I have gone out with the girl, we have had to go on the sly, without her mother's knowledge. Now, I am sure the only way to keep things smooth is to give up the girl; just call it quits.

But I do love her and she loves me, I know. So is there any possible way that we could stay together? Or shall we quit? Please believe this—I am a sensible boy and sincere in what I do. I like to play fair with everybody at all times. I will take your advice, whatever it may be, and I hope I have given you an understanding of the situation. Sincerely yours,

P. W.

If She Has Father, Appeal to Him

DEAR P. W.: In my opinion, the mother who would react to a situation of this kind with frenzied threats to kill herself, to have the man "fired" from his job, etc., is a person who is incipiently unbalanced. Mentally or emotionally, she is a sick woman. Either she is neuroticaly jealous of her daughter, where men are concerned; or her mind is clouded with foul suspicions concerning men-and-women relationships in general. An ingenuous chap of your sort is no match for her, and I think you should beware of getting mixed up with any persons of her blood. I venture to predict that you will be the heavy loser in the end, if you don't call "quits" on this romance.

The cards are stacked against you. If you no more than follow the girl's lead in disobeying her mother's wishes, you will be putting yourself in line to be accused of full and guilty responsibility in the matter; and you will not be able to clear yourself easily of the charge. Why? Because the daughter, being only 16, must be considered a child, regardless of how "grown up" she may seem to be in appearance and emotional reactions. And because you, at 24, must be accounted adult. As the adult in the association, it is your responsibility to see that she commits no indiscretions as a result of your mutual love.

One assumes, of course, that the girl must be somewhat precocious in her physical and emotional development, in order to have gotten so far ahead of herself, figuratively speaking, as to have a 24-year-old sweetheart. But if her mother chooses to remain blind to this aspect of her personality and insists on keeping her still the child which her age implies that she is—then traditional sentiment is on her side.

Society would instinctively endorse her stand that a man of 24 was doing subtle psychological injury to an adolescent girl, in making serious love to her. People would echo this mother's indignant protests to the effect that you ought to know better; that you ought to be ashamed of yourself, etc.—without stopping to inquire whether this was a special case, constituting a special exception to the general rule. You are engaging in dangerous — because definitely antisocial — business, therefore, if you are aiding and abetting the girl in asserting an independence of action that is not consistent with the figures.

There is only one slim chance, as I see it, whereby you might manage to keep the romance afloat, on an irreproachable basis. And that would consist in appealing to the girl's father (providing, of course, her father is alive and has co-equal jurisdiction with her mother over her actions). Although you have not mentioned the father, let's assume he exists in the background.

Why not have the proverbial man-to-man talk with him, for the purpose of convincing him of the tremendous sincerity and uprightness of your love for his daughter. Ask him what he thinks is the fair thing to do by everybody concerned, in view of the extraordinary circumstances and the mother's attitude in particular. If you could win his sympathetic support, it should be possible to work out some plan, both honorable and discreet, for keeping in constant touch with the girl, despite the mother's objections. If her father is dead or absent, perhaps you could appeal to a grandparent, an uncle or an aunt, to serve you two in the capacity of "friend at court."

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Fashionable Waists And Flat Tummies Necessitate Exercise

WITH WAISTLINES down to a whisper, exercise is nothing to quibble about. You may be able to pass up general calisthenics but there isn't a woman in the world who can get by without specific exercise for a neat and tidy waistline and a tummy that is flatter than flat—unless, of course, she starves herself. In that case, she so completely loses her looks that streamlining is beside the point.

The only question about waistline exercise is: What kind? Well, since you are probably counting on a cigarette silhouette by next Tuesday, you will want the best. That's any exercise which pries your ribs away from your hips and gives you a thorough transverse stretch. Don't be alarmed. It's easy.

Try it this way.

Lie on the back on the floor and relax for a minute. Then stretch to full extension, feet down and hands clasped above the head on the floor. Keep the upper part of the back flat on the floor as you slowly turn the hips to the left, holding the legs together so that when the turning is finished the right leg is on top. Relax in that position, then turn in the other direction.

Oh, so you've been through that before! That's not surprising; it's just another way of telling you to twist the hips to the left, then to the right. But the trouble with twisting is that it sounds too easy and you are apt not to pay attention to what you are doing. The twist is slimming only insofar as it serves to pull the ribs and hips apart.

Here is another floor stretcher: Grip a leg of a heavy table, divan or chest of drawers (don't pick anything you can pull over on yourself) as you lie on the back on the floor. Flex the knees and draw them up to the chest, then shoot the legs straight out to the left and swing them down on the floor until the body is in a straight line. Keep the shoulders flat against the floor during this. Flex the knees again, and shoot the legs out to the right.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay.

Ready for Company

The apartment had seemed very pleasant and orderly until the telephone rang. Now all is changed. Mr. Nubbin is coming!

You rush around picking the evening newspaper off the floor, grabbing up a pile of July and August magazines from the reading table.

"Wait! Where are you taking those?" protests the man of the house.

You pause. "Oh, to your closet—temporarily," you reply.

"I can't see why you're making such a fuss," he says grouchily.

What of course he can't understand is that Mr. Nubbin is going to carry back word of you to Babb City—to all your friends . . . and especially to Mabel. True, you've never seen him—this man who married your once best friend, but that's all the more reason why you should put up a good front. You can hear them all asking, "How does she look?" "What kind of an apartment has she?"

In fact, that's just why he's coming by—Mabel wants a report on you. Well, you have three-quarters of an hour—he said he'd come at 8:45, and you've got to get the place looking respectable . . . and John into his collar and shoes . . . and yourself—heavens, what you MUST do to yourself!

You anoint your face hurriedly with cold cream, continue your assault on the living room. Now these old war maps you've been saving from the Sunday papers——

"I'll take them," says your husband haughtily, sticking them down in the chair beside him.

You gather up the accumulated mail of several days, cram it into an already crowded table drawer. Now what if Mr. Nubbin should open that drawer? . . . Oh, surely he won't.

You ruthlessly begin clearing the window sill of pipes, pipe cleaners, matches, pocket knife, shoe horn, pencil——

"Wait! That's my stuff!" exclaims the Sultan.

"I'll put it all back," you promise.

He glowers. "Now what are you doing with that chair?"

"I'm just moving it to the other side of the room. It makes a better balance."

He watches you moodily as you change the lamp shade, bring out the company rug and lay it on the floor, then advance on the bathroom.

"You don't expect him to go in there, do you?" asks your mentor.

"He might peep in," you reply, as you start changing the dresser scarf. You rid the bureau of all its jars and bottles leaving only a dainty perfume container and a delicate powder box. But there are still so many little things you don't know what to do with."

You think wistfully of your great aunt Nannie, who, losing interest in her declining years in housekeeping, solved the "company" problem by keeping on hand a huge laundry basket in which she loaded all her treasured debris and carried it to the basement when guests were coming, bringing it back upstairs when they departed. After all maybe she wasn't so "queer" as you used to think.

You pitch into the bathroom, ignoring your husband's mutterings, scour the wash bowl, put down the Christmas gift rug, hang up the Christmas gift guest towels. Now you have just 15 minutes left to get yourself—and him—ready for Mr. Nubbin.

Clean, neat and precise, you are both sittting in your very correct living room when Mr. Nubbin arrives.

An abstracted looking man in heavy lensed spectacles, he lets himself be conducted to a chair artfully arranged to give him a view of your one good oil painting and of the lighted bedroom beyond. He can only stay 15 minutes, he explains, as he must catch a train. He had merely promised "Mabel" that he would come by to say "Hello."

As the door closes behind him, you stand surveying your very proper apartment. Well, after all, you reflect, it was a good thing to get everything cleaned up for once——

"Say," says your husband, looking helplessly at the window sill, where's my pipe cleaner? And my tobacco can? And where did you put those papers and magazines? And another thing, I want the scissors and a piece of string."

Home Nursing Self-Taught

DOES EVEN a slight illness in your family cause confusion and dismay? Equipped with correct nursing information you can bring order out of chaos, can step confidently into a nursing role.

Perhaps a member of your family has had an operation and your task is to help her recover her strength. Smoothly you carry out a routine to that end.

Midmorning and midafternoon you give a strengthening drink such as eggnog. You see that she has an early bedtime, an afternoon nap, as much exercise as the doctor permits.

Or perhaps your problems concern the newest member of your family. Your baby's downy head is full of ugly scales! You may have been too fearful of the soft spot or fontanel, which, like the rest of the scalp, should have a daily washing with soap and water.

Little "crises" too are simple to handle. If junior has "something" in his eye, wash in eyecup with cool solution of boric acid—which you make by adding one teaspoonful of boric acid powder to one cup boiling water. If eye is inflamed, a drop of castor oil is soothing.

What to do for colds? How to take a pulse, make a bed with your patient in it?

Rumania's King Carol Awards Medal to Jacqueline Cochran

Husband Floyd Odlum Also Honored in Ceremony at Legation; Minister Iremescu Presents Country's Aeronautical Decoration

By Hope Ridings Miller.

HIS MAJESTY, King Carol II of Rumania, came into the Capital picture yesterday, when in his behalf, the aeronautical medal of his country was bestowed on Jacqueline Cochran, noted aviatrix, and her husband, Floyd Odlum.

In a short but impressive ceremony at the Rumanian Legation just before luncheon, the Rumanian Minister, Radu Irimescu, made the presentations, while a small group of distinguished guests looked on.

The event was in the nature of an anniversary celebration; for exactly five years ago Miss Cochran stopped in Bucharest to re-fuel her plane when she was participating in an air race from London to Australia. Minister Irimescu, who, at that time, was serving his country as air minister, played a role in that stage of her flight. He advised her that in case she should land in Bucharest, special permission would be granted for her to come down on the military air field. Well, she did. And ever since, she and her husband have continued their association with topflight officials in Rumania's world of aviation.

All this is simply a background for yesterday's ceremony and the luncheon fete which followed, both of which were among the most entertaining events I have attended this season.

Guests gathered in the spacious drawing room, where the decorative motif of ivory and soft green gave an exceptionally cool effect for an unusually warm autumn day. Receiving informally, the Minister and Mme. Irimescu presented each new arrival to Miss Cochran and Mr. Odlum. The former, who always looks like a fashion plate, was trimly turned out in a tailored black frock, with a high neckline and long sleeves. She rarely wears a hat. She didn't yesterday; and her medium-bobbed blonde hair contrasted nicely with her dark ensemble.

Mme. Irimescu wore a frock of teal blue crepe, accordion pleated and draped into soft bodice, full skirt and flowing sleeves. A necklace of crystal set off her becoming costume.

Minister Presents Pictures to Honor Guest

Highlights of the party, in addition to the presentation ceremony, were the brief toasts during luncheon, when Minister Irimescu arose and mentioned the anniversary which was being celebrated and presented to Miss Cochran some framed photographs made at that time. The aviatrix, who by her own admission is not addicted to speech making, replied in a few well-chosen words, expressing her graditude to the Minister, and voicing her feeling that when she landed for re-fueling in Bucharest instead of further along the line, she did a good day's work.

W. S. Culbertson, who at one time served the United States as Minister to Rumania, then made a brief and impromptu speech that synchronized Miss Cochran's achievements with the decoration she had just received. In addition he proposed a toast to his majesty, King Carol; and Minister Irimescu, in turn proposed one to the President of the United States.

Guests, seated at two long tables, were served with a menu fit for King Carol himself. Ornamental silver centerpieces, flanked by low bowls of gold and bronze chrysanthemums, decorated both tables. At the right of Minister Irimescu sat Miss Cochran. On his left was Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, wife of the president of the Export-Import Bank, looking as pretty as a pink in a snappy black frock and a small hat, tilted forward and trimmed with coque feathers.

Mrs. Grady Wears Stunning Outfit

On Mme. Irimescu's right was Henry F. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State; and on her left, was Robert H. Hinckley, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Across the table, Floyd Odlum was engaging attractive Mrs. Grady in conversation that had all appearances of embracing the current international situation. Incidentally, Mrs. Grady's ensemble was a knock-out, if there ever was one. Her smart wine-colored suit, fashioned with a fitted coat and a gored skirt was trimmed with brown seal and a braided-effect design on the sleeves and front. A matching feather turban, slippers of the exact shade as her suit, hose dyed to match, and a corsage of gardenias were further accents for her stunning outfit.

Mrs. Mable Walker Willebrandt, who has known Jacqueline Cochran for many years, has been interested in aeronautics as long as any woman I know, and was Miss Cochran's number one sponsor before that lovely lady ever won her way to national and international fame, was in yesterday's company. She wore a handsome black ensemble, and as usual was the center of admiring eyes from the minute she entered the room until she left the luncheon party a couple of hours later.

Nellie Tayloe Ross Among Guests

Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, director of the Mint; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Murray, Col. and Mrs. John Alden Crane, the Air Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Rene Weiser, Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Warner, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Stanford C. Hooper, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Lindsay, Mrs. Culbertson and Warren Lee Pierson were among others there.

Making one of their first partying appearances in the Capital were the new legation secretary, Brutus Coste and Mme. Coste, both of whom are most attractive. They came here from the Rumanian Legation in London; and unless I miss my guess, they will be very popular in younger Washington circles. Laurence Bungardeanu, of the legation staff, already a popular member of the diplomatic corps, also was among those in the pleasant company.

Lois Rinehart Wed to Mr. Lege

Of interest here was the wedding last evening in the chapel of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville of Miss Lois Jane Rinehart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Rinehart, of Boxwood, Charlottesville, to Frederick Marion Lege 3d, son of Mrs. F. M. Lege, jr., and the late Mr. Lege, of Dallas, Tex.

The Rev. Roy Mason officiated at the ceremony, which was followed by a reception at Boxwood. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white gros des Londres faille silk, a model designed especially for her by Henri Bendel, of New York. Her tulle veil fell from a coronet of lilies of the valley and she carried a shower bouquet of these flowers and white orchids.

Mrs. Robert Schlesinger, of Charlottesville, was matron of honor, and Miss Susan Rinehart, a sister, was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were the Misses Rosemary Rinehart, Purdon Beauchamp Whitely and Jull Tietsort. Their gowns of white net were made with modified bustles and they carried old-fashioned bouquets of lilies of the valley, gardenias, carnations and bouvardia.

Malcolm Murphy was best man, and the ushers were W. A. Rinehart III, Robert Schlesinger, George Whitely, Morgan Whitely and Henry Thornton.

After a wedding trip the couple will reside on the Diamond L. Ranch, near Fort Worth. The bride attended the Warrenton Country Day School and Mr. Lege the Hill School and the University of Virginia.

Call to New York Deprives Mason Party of Clare Boothe and Mr. Luce

BEAUTEOUS, CAUSTICALLY CLEVER Clare Boothe (no propagandist she) and her able, publishing tycoon husband, Henry Luce, were unable at the last moment to attend the party given last evening by Mr. and Mrs. George Grant Mason.

Miss Boothe had to go to New York at the last moment to take care of several changes in the cast. This means that she will not sail for Europe on Tuesday as she had planned, but will wait until the opening of her show in New York a week from Wednesday.

However, there were several members of the cast present at the party, which was one of the most successful of Washington's so-far sluggish season. Among them was Bramwell Fletcher, who plays the part of the consul's secretary and Bert Lytell.

The scene of the gathering was the Mason's home in Georgetown.

A year ago Mrs. Mason startled the natives by painting this house a shade they call mustard colored, she calls chartreuse. With its two large, high ceilinged living rooms, the house is admirably adapted to entertaining on a grand scale. It was the scene of many a brilliant party, when the owner, Mrs. Albert G. Simms, formerly Ruth Hanna McCormick, made her home there until a few years ago. Later Mrs. Dwight Davis, equally talented as a hostess, occupied it when she was Mrs. Charles Sabin, and after that Mrs. Harold Walker, mother of glamorous Evie Robert, had it for a winter.

A piano player added to the gayety of the evening by playing numerous selections. The house was profusely decorated in gold chrysanthemums and in one of the living rooms a glass vase held two enormous orchids.

Mrs. Mason was in a lovely bright red velvet gown with a bouffant skirt and a low back. Mrs. John Hay Whitney, who went abroad with Mrs. Mason this summer, drove up from Middleburg especially for the party. She was wearing a tailored dinner dress with a fuschia jacket and a full skirt.

The Polish Ambassador was noticed sitting on a sofa in deep conversation with Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, who with her husband has just returned from a trip to New York. She was gowned in pale pink satin fashioned with narrow shoulder straps.

Mrs. Arthur Krock came in looking lovely in red velvet with diamond clips at the shoulder. John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, was also present. Benjamin Plunket, Attache of the British Embassy, was being welcomed back on all sides from a recent trip abroad.

Others seen included Mrs. George T. Summerlin, jr., Mrs. George Pulver, Robert Coe, Miss Mary Johnson, in white chiffon; Walcott Waggaman, Pendleton Turner and many others. Champagne and whisky were served during the evening with little cheese sandwiches.

MRS. RALPH WORTHINGTON will give a cocktail party tomorrow afternoon for her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs William Coad. They are here from a week's stay in New York for another visit before returning to their home in Omaha. The party, which will celebrate their first wedding anniversary, will take place at Mrs. Worthington's home 2019 Connecticut avenue, from 4 until 7.

THE DISTRICT FEDERATION of Women's Clubs "playing safe" at its opening meeting Monday at the Roosevelt Hotel, will devote its program to the subject of "Safety." Speakers will be Mrs. George C. Thorpe, chairman of the Women's Safety Committee, of the American Automobile Association; Washington I. Cleveland, of the A. A. A.; and Edwin D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., and Gen. Albert L. Cox, of the American Red Cross.

Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers, chairman of music, will present Mrs. James Lee Oliver, soprano, and Mrs. Warren Grimes, accompanist.

"AS OTHERS SEE US"—And, speaking of the District Federation, some of the members have opportunity to see themselves as others see them this week. Life magazine devotes three pages to a cake sale recently held at the home of Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel, the president, for the benefit of the golden jubilee foundation fund—and they're good pictures, too.

OFF TO NEW YORK—Mrs. Georgette Ross Howard, who was presented on the first of the federation's radio broadcasts last Friday, goes to New York Wednesday to present a lecture before the English Speaking Union, at its headquarters in Rockefeller Center. She will be guest of honor at a tea following.

Tuesday, October 31, she will open her series of lectures on current topics, at the Sulgrave Club. Mrs. Howard, in addition to her heavy schedule of speaking engagements, gives time to the local branch of the A. A. U. W. as a member of its international relations committee.

AT ATTENTION—Miss Luella P. Chase, who is regent of the Susan Reviere Hetzel Chapter of the D. A. R., will lead the salute to the flag today at the opening meeting of the Political Study Club.

Mrs. Robert Says D. A. R. Is United for U. S. Neutrality

Daughters of the American Revolution are united in their desire that America maintain neutrality and an adequate national defense, says Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general. She has just returned from attending D. A. R. conferences in ten States, from Missouri to Maine.

The attitude of the D. A. R. has not crystalized on the point of what methods may be best for accomplishing the end, she says, and no resolutions regarding the embargo act were passed.

Mrs. Robert is in Washington for the annual fall board meeting which takes place Wednesday of next week at Memorial Continental Hotel and is staying at the Mayflower Hotel. There will be a large attendance, she says, and the board session will be preceded by committee meetings and conferences Monday and Tuesday.

Thursday, the board members will be guests of the president general in Annapolis, Md., her home town, for a tour of its Colonial houses. The following day, Mrs. Robert and a large delegation will go to Tammassee School, maintained by the D. A. R. in South Carolina, to attend the dedication of a health house and boys' dormitory, and from there to Kate Duncan Smith School, in Alabama, for the dedication of a model farm and new teacherage.

Mrs. Robert will leave after the dedications for a tour of eight States in the northwest, continuing her visits to State conferences.

The outstanding event of the trip from which she has returned was the formal inauguration of the golden jubilee year of the D. A. R. with the presentation of a portrait of Caroline Scott Harrison, first president general to the Harrison Home in Indianapolis, which has been restored by the Jordan Foundation. There were 30 national board members present. The portrait, copied from that in the White House is by Randolph Coats, Indiana artist.

Miss Katharine Brooks, president of the club, and Helene Livingston Kravatz, first vice president, received with the guests of honor. About 60 guests attended, among them Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, and an associate member of the club; Mrs. Edward Burke, who poured, and Senator Burke; Mrs. Felix Morley, who also poured; Mr. Morley, editor of The Post; Mrs. Henry Heath, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Patterson, Mrs. Joseph Goldberger, wife of the famous Dr. Goldberger; Miss Ruby Black, president of the Women's National Press Club; Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Dillard Gunn and their daughter, Nancy; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Heinl, Mr. and Mrs. M. Inter-American Women's Chairman Sees All Nations' Progress Related

Miss Doris Stevens, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women, addressing the Newcomb Club of Bethesda yesterday, declared there is no such thing as self-sufficient cultural development in the progress of women. The progress of North American women, those of Latin America and of Europe is interrelated, she asserted.

Miss Stevens spoke at the club's opening luncheon at the Kenwood Country Club, and Mrs. William N. Norris, the president, presided.

"The formal and expressed ideals of liberty, equality and fraternity of the Latin republics bear eloquent witness to their desire to adopt the democratic pattern and reject dictatorial regimes," she said. "This, however, is impossible to attain until the state is based on a family rule that gives women greater authority over their children."

Referring to the work of the Inter-American Commission toward this end, Miss Stevens said it "would be a pity to have the commission, founded for and dedicated to the pursuit of strengthening democracy, become just one more bureaucratic agency of governments, subservient to political patronage of which it was, for ten years, happily free."

Report Hits Segregation Of Students

Committee Advises Abolition of Two Special Schools for Tubercular Pupils

A special advisory committee last night urged the Board of Education to abolish the District's two schools for children in the primary stage of tuberculosis, and to outfit one of the vacated schools, Allison, so that crippled pupils now being taught at Langdon School can move in.

The resolutions were adopted after reports of sub-committees of the Advisory Committee to Study Needs for Handicapped Children quoted medical authority that children with primary tuberculosis were in no way benefited by segregation, and that they would not endanger healthy children.

Dr. Coulter Speaks

Dr. A. Barklie Coulter, director of the Health Department's bureau for tuberculosis and a member of the advisory committee, speaking at the meeting held last night, flatly declared:

"There are not now, and never have been, any pupils in the health schools—Allison and Toner—suffering from the reinfection type of tuberculosis. There are many more children in regular public schools suffering from the noncommunicable type of tuberculosis than there are at Allison and Toner schools."

Dr. Coulter revealed that since he took charge of the cases in 1936 he had difficulty in selecting pupils for the special treatment at the two health schools. All dangerous cases, he pointed out, are sent to the Glenn Dale Sanitorium. Thus he chose Allison and Toner pupils on the ground that they needed good food and general health improvement.

Ruhland Frowns On Practice

The report of the subcommittee on tubercular children, headed by Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, managing director of the District Tuberculosis Association, said that since 1931, the establishment of the Children's Sanitorium at Glenn Dale and Health Department's Chest Clinic have allowed segregation and treatment of children infected with communicable tuberculosis.

Special health schools as tuberculosis institutions are frowned on by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, and other leading medical authorities, according to the report.

Dr. J. A. Meyers, past president of the National Tuberculosis Association is quoted as follows: "It would be much better for your organization to recommend air conditioning of all schools in Washington so that all the children may benefit by it rather than to select a few children in each school who have primary tuberculosis complexes which adequate observation has shown are not especially benefitted by open-air classes."

Eight Recommendations

The subcommittee's report, approved by the full advisory group, made eight recommendations. These included:

That the Health Department explain clearly to the public its reasons for discontinuing the two health schools; that the Health Department inform the school administration what special facilities are needed in the regular schools to meet the needs of children with primary tuberculosis; that the Health Department make a case study of each child at Toner and Allison Schools.

That for these children, and for all children in subnormal health, the Health Department indicate a special regimen to be provided in the public schools; that the Health Department follow up the cases of all children returned to regular classes; that school authorities act quickly in providing necessary facilities.

That teachers should be tested for tuberculosis as well as the children.

87 Pupils Affected

Dr. Coulter disclosed that in the first nine months of 1939 only one white child had died of pulmonary tuberculosis. He said that 87 pupils would be affected should the school board act in accord with the recommendations, 51 colored children at Toner, 2322 F street northwest, and 36 white children at Allison, Thirteenth and Allison streets northwest.

After adoption of the tuberculosis report, the advisory committee approved the report of the sub-committee on crippled children, offered by its chairman, Charles W. Pimper. The resolution calls for transfers, "as soon as possible," of 28 crippled pupils now at Langdon School, Evarts and Twentieth street northeast, to Allison School. A discussion of long range policies in regard to crippled children, such as establishment of two specially-built schools, was left for further discussion.

The full committee also approved four recommendations made by Mrs. Allen L. Vories, chairman of the blind pupil unit. She urged more extensive ophthalmological supervision in the schools; hiring of a social worker as liaison between doctor, teacher, parent, and child; a survey of school lighting, and addition of a sight-saving class teacher.

Takoma Park Citizen Irked By Low Planes

CAA to Get Protest; Group for Retention Of Butternut Car Line

Elimination of the Butternut street car line as proposed by the Capital Transit Co., was opposed last night by the Takoma Park Citizens Association.

Reed F. Martin, president, urged members to attend the Public Utilities Commission hearing on the question October 30 and emphasized that residents of Takoma Park generally favor retention of the line.

The organization went on record protesting against low-flying planes and directed that the Civil Aeronautics Authority be informed of the action.

A motion also was approved urging the District Commissioners to include funds in the budget for an adequate building for the District Court and to permit construction of a new school at Thirteenth and Upshur streets northwest.

Funds were asked for improving approaches of the railroad underpass at Van Buren and Aspen streets northwest, and for construction of a sidewalk on the west side of Fifth street northwest between Van Buren and Tuckerman streets.

President Accepts Resignation of John H. Bartlett

BARTLETT

A former Governor of New Hampshire, Bartlett had been a member of the commission for ten years. He first came to Washington as chairman of the Civil Service Commission and also served as first Assistant Postmaster General.

Bartlett said he resigned to attend to his extensive real estate and banking interests and to write a "book history" of New Hampshire.

U. S. Unitarian Head Addresses All Souls' Rally

The Christian Church is becoming increasingly aware of the need of recognizing the social implications of religion, Dr. Frederick M. Eliot, president of the American Unitarian Association, said last night at All Souls Unitarian Church—which his great-grandfather helped to found.

Addressing a rally dinner of the congregation, he cited the growing expansion of the Unitarian movement, and praised the aggressive promotional work being done by the denomination through radio and other means.

William J. Eliot, jr., chairman of the board of trustees, and also a descendant of the church's founders, presided at the function, at which Dr. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, pastor, also spoke. Edward F. House, jr., was chairman of arrangements.

An Irony for Today

When William Cunningham, colored, was arraigned Thursday before Police Court Judge Casey, he was charged with trespassing on railroad property and released on his personal bond "to leave town."

Yesterday, Cunningham was back before Judge Casey and, according to W. A. Peal, railroad detective, he was loitering on railroad property again.

"How did I come to let you go yesterday?" Judge Casey asked the man.

"I was trying to leave town, your honor," the defendant replied.

He was ordered to pay $25 or spend 30 days in jail.

Owen Young Sees Church In New Task

Universalists May Be Champions of Liberalism Again, Lawyer Predicts

The Universalist Church may again be the champion of a new liberalism, Owen D. Young predicted at last night's banquet climaxing the Universalist convention at the Mayflower Hotel.

Distinguished layman of the denomination, philanthropist and lawyer, Young said "it was Roger Williams who brought freedom of speech to Providence Plantation and to America" and declared that the Universalist Church was the last in the line of great Protestant faiths because it had lodged its protests against Protestants themselves.

"Only when the enemy retired, vanquished, did the Universalist Church withdraw," he said, "and now again it may be the champion of a new liberalism."

Describes His Youth

Wistfully describing his childhood and youth in the Universalist Church, Young said that "whenever I hear the word 'Universalist' it is with tender and grateful memories, unlike other memories, with no disappointments and no regrets. Those were the days of lofty confidences, of certainties that I have never known since."

Young said he owed more to Universalist leaders than anyone else in the world.

Toastmaster of the occasion, Young was introduced by Dr. Walter Henry Macpherson, retiring president, with the statement that "I give you one who has grown up in our church, not an 'anti-hellion' but one who has concerned himself with the unities and universals in the fields of business and international affairs."

Youth and Age Speak

Youth recorded the history of the past and age saw visions of the future, as the Rev. Harmon M. Gehr, of Columbus, Ohio, pastor who once served a church in Young's home town of Van Hornesville, N. Y. spoke on the creative power of the past, and Dr. Lee S. McCollester, 80-year-old emeritus dean of the Tufts School of Religion, pictured the future of Universalism.

Earlier in the day, the convention elected Louis A. Ames, New York flag manufacturer, as president, and called on the Nation's churches to propose "a platform on which an abiding peace can be built."

"We believe there should be a declaration of peace aims by the United States," delegates declared, "and especially by the Christian Church in the United States."

The convention asked the Federal Council of Churches, through its department of international justice and goodwill, to assemble immediately a conference representing all phases of Christian thought in America for study of problems of the war and its causes.

Support Objectors' Rights

Delegates also went on record supporting a resolution reaffirming the rights of conscientious objectors in the Universalist Church, and asked that the President and Secretary of State be informed of their stand.

Named as vice president of the denomination were the Rev. Fenwick Leavitt, of New York City; Mrs. Ezra B. Wood, of New Haven, and the Rev. Max A. Kapp, of Rochester, N. Y.

Elected trustees for four years were Elwood J. Way, of the local Universalist Church; Arthur Britton, Nassau, N. H.; Edgar T. Williams, Chattanooga, Tenn.; H. E. Simmons, Akron, Ohio, and Harold S. Latham, New York.

Among those named to the central committee on fellowship was Dr. Frederick Perkins, former pastor of the local Universalist Church, and now of Boston.

Jordon Jury Tampering Charge Probed

Upperman Accused By 2 Lawyers; 9 Of Venire Quizzed

Nine of the jurors who condemned Thomas Jordon to death in 1936 for the sensational Garden T Shoppe holdup murder eight years ago were quizzed in the district attorney's office last night about charges that former Deputy United States Marshal John B. Upperman tampered with their deliberations.

Two lawyer's made the jury tampering charge when Jordon's habeas corpus hearing before Chief Justice Wheat neared adjournment in the District Court yesterday afternoon. Jordon's lawyer, James J. Laughlin, accused Upperman and an outside lawyer wired Wheat that he had "documentary evidence" of tampering.

District Attorney Pine immediately assigned Assistant District Attorney Wilson to make a "complete investigation."

Inquiry Speeded

The nine jurors were summoned to the courthouse within three hours. Two were out of Washington and the twelfth could not be located last night.

After questioning the jurors three hours with the aid of Assistant District Attorney Krouse, Pine and Wilson announced:

"We have interviewed nine of the jurors in respect of the charge of jury tampering, have obtained their statements and are in a position to present their testimoney if the circumstances should require it."

The prosecutors said they could not disclose the result of their questioning, but it appeared that the jurors' story might be heard in open court Monday, when Chief Justice Wheat resumed the habeas corpus hearing, by which Jordon hopes to win a new trial. He is now serving a life term in prison, his death sentence having been commuted by President Roosevelt.

Wilson expected today to question Upperman, summoning him from Occoquan Workhouse, where is serving a jail term for taking a bribe to tamper with the jury that tried members of the $2,000,000 numbers gang for criminal conspiracy a year ago.

Confessions Repudiated

Laughlin's surprise charges yesterday capped eight years of sensational developments in the Garden T Shoppe murder in which Mrs. Elizabeth Jaynes, elderly cashier, was slain. Jordon was questioned soon after the killing, but was freed. The police claimed he confessed twice when rearrested several years later. Jordon repudiated the confessions on the witness stand, but was convicted.

Lawyers fought tenaciously to win him a new trial, and a sub-committee of the House District Committee investigated the case. This was followed by the commutation. Jordon's latest habeas corpus was filed this summer and reopened last month, when Laughlin claimed he found new and suppressed evidence in the testimony before the House committee, which was kept secret two years.

Preview Guests Find 1940 Autos Brighter, Roomier, Better

Slide-Easy Upholstery, Improved Doors Make Entrance and Exit Smoother; Prices Are Lower, and There's a Real One-Man Top

The gleaming new automobiles that will begin to cruise the streets of the National Capital about Christmas time were previewed last night by guests invited before the opening tonight of the twentieth annual show of the Washington Automotive Trade Association at Riverside Stadium, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest.

New models displayed greater stream-lining and brighter colors than marked cars of previous years, and manufacturers generally featured the "sealed headlight" designed to give greater brilliance with less glare.

Guests were impressed by fuller vision from the front seat and by the smooth upholstery which makes "sliding over" so much easier.

While officials explained that prices are lower this year than last, the prospective customer noted the absence of running boards and the increased width of seats as well as greater ease in entering and alighting, evident in the 90 models on display.

Dealers viewing the cars lined up in the flag-decked stadium remarked that "many mechanical improvements" had been made in all lines.

Most striking development, they said, was the new convertible top, which can be raised by power from the engine.

"If you've ever had a convertible," a young official stated, "you know it took three men and two girls, all restraining their tempers, to put up a 'one-man top.'"

Entertainment was provided by stars from Station WJSV, including Arch MacDonald, sports commentator; Jack Dalton, Garry Stephens, Adalita and Juanita, singers; Johnny Salb, organist, and staff announcers.

Ducks Fly South And Prophets See An Early Winter

Those weather prophets who rely on the tortured corn, the falling leaf and other natural phenomena had reason to look for an early winter yesterday, while the Weather Bureau predicted fair and warmer for today, followed by showers and cooler at night.

Amateur forecasters who drove by the wildfowl sanctuary at Roaches Run saw black ducks and pintails swarming there, on their way South well ahead of schedule.

"It's the earliest ever," said Paul Hodge, caretaker. "We always get a few early birds at this time of the year but these blacks and pintails are arriving in mid-November numbers. I don't know what to make of it."

Yesterday, warmest of the last ten days, registered a maximum temperature of 77 degrees at 3:50 p. m. The low was 51 at 6 a. m.

Weather Bureau Plan Is Approved

New Guard Armory Model Passed by Fine Arts Group; Stone Facing Urged

The Fine Arts and National Capital Park and Planning Commissions were in an approbative mood yesterday, giving their respective blessings to a variety of items ranging from plans for the new National Guard armory to a sheaf of Persian manuscripts.

The two groups met separately in the new Interior building but several matters of mutual interest were considered. One of these was the plan for a new home for the Weather Bureau.

Submitted by Louis A. Simon, supervising architect of the Public Buildings Administration, the plan provides for early construction of the first unit, which would be of brick and face northward on M street between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets.

The scheme calls for eventual construction of two wings, and possibly a third, which would make the weather plant a four-sided affair with an interior court. Ultimately the existing Weather Bureau headquarters, located in the same square, would be razed. There would be no interference with Columbia Maternity Hospital, which occupies the L street side of the square.

The Fine Arts Commission approved the modified Colonial design and the planning body passed favorably upon practical features of the project, including land use and the height of the first unit, five stories and penthouse, surmounted by an observation cupola.

Congress has appropriated $250,000 to build the first unit.

Regarding the new National Guard armory, for construction of which $2,700,000 has been authorized, the planners approved closing of several "paper streets" traversing the site and the arts group indorsed the model and detailed architectural plans, after suggesting certain changes.

"The FineArts Commission wishes to emphasize," said H. P. Caemmerer, secretary, "that the armory will set the building standard for the lower East Capitol street vicinity and therefore it cannot be planned too carefully. A granite or marble exterior is preferred but a good grade of brick would be acceptable if funds are not sufficient for the use of stone."

The same commission also passed architectural designs for the terminal building and hangars at the Washington National Airport (Gravelly Point) and the proposed system of road and building locations.

Football Teams Joe E. Brown And Miss Raye

"$1,000 A TOUCHDOWN." Paramount picturization of an original screen play by Delmer Daves, costarring Joe E. Brown and Martha Raye, with Eric Blore, Susan Hayward, John Hartley, Matt McHugh, Joyce Mathews, Syd Saylor, Josef Swickard, George Barton, Bob Milasch, William Hoade, Frank M. Thomas, Grace Goodall, D'Arcy Corrigan, Hugh Sothern, Charles Middleton, Constance Romanoff, Al Herman, Jimmy Conlin and Tom Dugan. Directed by James Hogan. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Metropolitan Theater.

"$1,000 A Touchdown" is a krazy kampus komedy in which wide-mouthed Joe E. Brown plays a bashful young thespian named Marlowe Sothern Booth and wide-mouthed Martha Raye plays an animated young heiress, whose sole legacy, besides a mink coat that will make the ladies clutch, is a college—beg pardon, kollege—which has no students. It opened yesterday at the Metropolitan and has no pretentions whatever except to garner guffaws, which it does.

More wretched even than unhappy Dido, is Marlowe Sothern Booth, whose theatrical pedigree, as any mouse can guess, is something enormous. He is afraid of crowds, simply can't exist in a room with more than 12 people in it. Which, to an actor, you will admit, is disastrously confining. He plumbs the depths of Shakespearean tragedy—and how!

So where can such a wretch find peace of mind? As a football coach, you dope!

As the instructor of 11 athletic young men, Marlowe falls back on his thespian blood and whips, into the toughest coach that ever drilled a team without any scrimmage practice. Because he has such a lack of endurance for more than his quota of fellow humans, Marlowe prohibits any substitutes in Marshall College's football team and when one of his boys gets konked, an alcoholized coach is forced to carry the pigskin across the line.

Martha Shouts and Sings

Miss Raye pouts, primps and shouts an exuberant song through the course of all this mad fol-de-rol. Her problems are nothing short of labyrinthic, for when one owns an institution of higher learning with no students, one has no football team with which to attract other flies to the web, and with no girls one will have no boys, and with no boys one will find girl students chilly to educational plottings. Wherewith, the blessings of Providence and the Hays office descend with a wee suggestion of Sex. Let love be the attraction, let romance be the piece-de-resistance of the curriculum and the young will beat a path to the school house doors! Oh, ye immortal gods of learning, let this be a lesson to yuh!

So, as we were saying before this panegyric set upon us, comes love and a moonlight class in romance, resulting in a corps of girls who know how to rout recalcitrant football-players from their locker-room fortress.

From which, even the sketchiest and most impatient of readers can tell that there is nothing of the socially significant in "$1,000 A Touchdown." It's all in unsophisticated fun and let's leave it that.

The Metropolitan screen also offers a not very exciting newsreel, bearing down on the football situation with an awesome seriousness. Edgar Kennedy's comedy, "Feathered pests," and a Paramount color classic (cartoon, to you), "Fresh Vegetable Mystery," complete the bill.

Belasco

If you wish to attain a fair and detached attitude toward nudism, try a once-over of "Unashamed," which has decorated the Belasco Theater screen for these past two weeks. You get so used to gals and gents strolling around in the altogether that a person in shorts seems conspicuous.

Diversion in a nudist camp is a bit limited if "Unashamed" is to be trusted. The local Adams and Eves play volley ball endlessly, try their hands at archery and get terribly cute splashing each other in the samp pool. All shots are made with discrimination and you need fear no more real embarrassment than would ensue on showing Aunt Ida around the Corcoran Art Gallery. There's a diluted romance, chiefly involving one girl following an enamored couple all around the camp.

Only criticism of "Unashamed" is that it has missed on all its good comedy chances. Also, we couldn't understand that strange office where the boss called the stenographer "Miss Lane" and she addressed him as "Robert."

Richly engrossing to students of the movies are the two current Belasco shorts of cinema development, one showing historic events dating from the early days of the century, the other the "March of Time" interpretation of the growth of the celluloids.

'Mr. Smith Goes to Washington' Opens at Earle; Capitol Stage Bill Outpaces Screen Feature

New Capra Picture Has Faulty Story Excellently Acted; Brief Stage Bill

"MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON." Columbia picturization of a screen play by Sidney Buchman, based on a story by Lewis R. Foster, costarring James Stewart and Jean Arthur, with Claude Rains, Edward Arnold, Guy Kibbe, Thomas Mitchell, Eugene Pallette, Beulah Bondi, H. B. Warner, Harry Carey, Astrid Allwyn, Ruth Donnelly, Grant Mitchell, Porter Hall, Pierre Watkin, Charles Lane, William Demarest and scores more. Directed by Frank Capra. Previewed Tuesday, October 17. At the Earle Theater.

In "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," revealed for the first time to the public at the Earle Theater yesterday, Frank Capra once again demonstrates his recognized wizardry as a preeminent motion picture director who can contrive box-office successes even out of screen material that is largely specious.

BELL

In his first picture since the prize-winning "You Can't Take It With You," Mr. Capra sets up a youthful figure of staunch Americanism as his central character and transports him to the United States Senate on a corrupt emergency appointment by a governor who moves only as a puppet on the end of a string dangled by the boss of the State. The senior Senator is a member of the same political machine and an old friend of the lad's father, who died by a shot in the back while defending a "lost cause." Approaching his new—and unknown—senatorial duties, Jefferson Smith is actuated by a starry-eyed patriotism that becomes intensified by his first glimpse of Washington and its many reminders of the country's greatness and the men who made it so. He dreams of a "Boy Rangers" development on a 200-acre tract near his old home out West. The boss of his State dreams of the same tract as a means of a gigantic and enormously profitable swindle. The picture's dramatic conflict is based upon this shady circumstance.

Is Rich in Comedy

Up to this point, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" is an amusing, swiftly moving and inspiring panorama of a bewildered young man trying to find his way around the National Capital and the mystifying halls of Congress. Once he locks horns on the floor of the Senate with the powers that prey, there is evidence that Director Capra was deserted by his Muse. The forces of evil are painted in such violent hues that they well might arouse the resentment of officials in high governmental places, the press, the radio and divers and sundry others. Frank Capra's keen sense of the fundamentals of exciting drama, and his unquestioned genius as a director with an infallible sense of humor and an equal command of melodramatic "punch," make all of this appear more rationalized and a stronger plea for Americanism and all that the United States stands for among the nations of the world than it is. Mr. Capra frequently has so glossed over falsity as to make it appear like truth.

I doubt that any political boss, no matter how powerful in his own little clique, could paralyze the press of an entire State by a single long-distance telephone call from Washington and similarly convert the radio into a medium for the dissemination of lies, libel, slander and a complete distortion of fact. I doubt, too, that, even if he could, the trucks of great metropolitan newspapers would run down kids peddling handbills in behalf of their hero and leave the youngsters lying there on the streets. But, as one views it on the screen, this is all extremely interesting, genuinely exciting—and exceedingly fraudulent.

Coupled with Capra's uncanny skill as a director are the talents of an exceptionally able cast whose unerring abilities contribute to the task of making unreality seem real. James Stewart in the title role—in which almost the sum total of the story's merit is bound up—does far and away the best work he ever has brought to the screen. When he gets into the swing of his 27-hour filibuster, he drops the deliberate methods that have become his trademark and lashes out with the vigor and power of a born orator fired by a tremendous patriotic zeal and pride in country. It not only is Jimmy Stewart's best performance, but one of the best turned in by any actor in recent months.

Support Is Superfine

As much can be said for Jean Arthur, in the role of Saunders, the disillusioned and hardboiled secretary, who steers Senator Smith to eventual victory. Claude Rains, in the role of the senior Senator—which any real Senator would shudder to think was his prototype—is no less competent, and Edward Arnold as Boss Taylor fits his obnoxious character without a wrinkle. Guy Kibbee, as the Governor; Thomas Mitchell, as the bibulous journalist whose character is such as to perpetuate the cinema's passion for maligning his profession; H. B. Warner, Eugene Pallette, Beulah Bondi, Astrid Allwyn and Harry Carey, as a kindly and indulgent president of the Senate, all play flawlessly.

"Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," needless to say, possesses all of the attributes of a big and scrupulously produced major release. Its Washington scenes, whether photographed here or reproduced on the West Coast, are minutely accurate and as marvelously picturesque as the National Capital itself.

The length of "Mr. Smith" reduces this week's stage bill at the Earle to a scant half hour, but it is a half hour packed with enjoyment. With Arlene King as a singing mistress of ceremonies, the bill is opened by the Roxyettes' new marimba novelty in which they do very well, thank you, with two popular numbers. The Oxford Boys score next in their impressions of famous orchestras, Faurice and Cordoba offer a group of their incomparable ballroom dances and the Roxyettes close with a Scotch time-step dance that is a honey. Their last week prior to a vacation of six is in the nature of a small triumph.

New York, Oct. 20.

WHEN TEDDY HART, the comic, first saw the script of "See My Lawyer" he was delighted at the lengthy role and the many flip cracks assigned to him . . . During the out-of-town tryouts, however, a number of his lines were taken away from him and given to some of the other actors . . . One day a long speech of which Teddy was proud was transferred to Milton Berle . . . The next day another of Hart's lines was assigned to Millard Mitchell . . . On the third day he was deprived of additional lines, which were given to Eddie Nugent . . . "Hey!" protested the role-dismembered Hart. "What am I—Czecho-Slovakia?"

THIS WEEK when another witness before the Dies Committee testified that Heywood Broun was a member of the Communist Party the press associations—mindful of Broun's previous attack upon them for having published such a statement without giving him an opportunity to verify or deny it—called his home to check the story . . . Broun was at the Racquet and Tennis Club, of which he is a member, when someone informed him that Philadelphia was calling . . . "See who it is and find out what they want," Heywood instructed. A few minutes later the man returned across the hallowed corridor of this, one of America's most exclusive clubs: "It's the Philadelphia Record. They want to know if you're a member of the Communist Party."

AFTER THE PREMIERE of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" George S. Kaufman went to the party tendered by Cole Porter and expressed nervousness as to how the critics would react to his show . . . George Jessel told this to Joe Schenck. "Kaufman just won't believe it's a hit," said Jessel . . . "He'll believe it," replied Schenck, "if you give him the message I have for him" . . . "What message?" asked Jessel. "Tell Kaufman," said Schenck, "I'm offering $125,000 for the movie rights."

JESSEL WAS the auctioneer at the Charity Show presented at Monte Carlo. After getting acceptable bids for a variety of objects, George held up a bracelet before the swanky assemblage—but no bids were forthcoming . . . He turned to Mrs. Frederick Watriss, mother of Brenda Frazier, and sighed: "Surely there's somebody here who'll buy this for Brenda."

THE FRONT PAGES, soon will announce the resignation of one of the most important members of the League for Peace and Democracy . . . Report from Washington is that WMCA will be exonerated by the FCC of the charge of broadcasting confidential messages sent in code by foreign nations . . . The Rockefellers are planning to help cement Latin-American relations by building a hotel in South America . . . Herta Drey, cousin of Luise Rainer, is being screen-tested by Orson Welles for the leading female role in his forthcoming movie.

ROUBEN MAMOULIAN, the film director, was invited by Theresa Helburn and Lawrence Langner's of the Theater Guild to come to Langner's home in Westport to discuss one of the new plays being produced by the guild . . . Mamoulian, who had directed "Porgy and Bess" for the Guild, went to Westport and consulted with them . . . When he returned to New York Mamoulian sent them a bill as follows: "Traveling expenses to and from Westport—$8.20; professional advice—$5,000." He added a postscript: "In view of our previous close association, please disregard the first item."

AMON CARTER, the Fort Worth publisher, who is Texas' No. 1 citizen, came into the Stork Club with Paul Whiteman . . . "I'm hurt," said Whiteman, "because you haven't told me yet what you think about my broadcasts for Chesterfield cigarettes" . . . "Those broadcasts are wonderful," Carter assured, "and to show you what I think of them—well, look" . . . Carter summoned the cigarette girl, ordered her entire supply of Chesterfields—24 cartons, at $2.50 per carton—and then counted his change . . . "Did you do that to show me how much you liked my broadcasts," Whiteman acknowledged, "or did you just want to find out how much is 24 times 2½—without bothering to multiply?"

'20,000 Men a Year' Does CAA a Favor In Flying Field; Stage Revue Tops

"20,000 MEN A YEAR." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by Frank Wead, adapted to the screen by Lou Breslow and Owen Francis, featuring Randolph Scott, Margaret Lindsay and Preston Foster, with Mary Healy, Kane Richmond, Douglas Wood, Robert Shaw, George Ernest, Maxie Rosenbloom, Sidney Miller and others. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Reviewed Friday morning. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

It is a little difficult to determine precisely what it is "20,000 Men a Year" wishes to say. This Cosmopolitan production released by Twentieth Century-Fox, and presented yesterday for the first time in Washington as chief screen feature for the week at Loew's Capitol Theater, is an indeterminate mixture of adult romance and antagonism, schoolboy flying and friendly advocacy of the Civil Aeronautics Authority's new scheme for training scholastic airplane pilots. It is mildly interesting in each of its ramifications, but adds up to a screen play that seems a bit doubtful of its true objective.

One of the best commercial fliers is grounded by a district inspector for disobedience of definite flying instructions, goes into the flying school business—in which he is one of the more eminent financial failures—and in time become instructor at an important seat of learning where practically the entire male enrollment is air-minded. One of his students is a younger brother of his arch enemy, who set him down out of the big, four-motor transcontinental ships. This offshoot of the story gets nowhere, beyond one lopsided fist fight. The youngster whose older sister deems him too young to risk the controls, proves to be the best flier of the lot and eventually saves Brad Reynolds' life and that of Tommy Howell, the braggart, trying to fly because he thinks big brother Jimmy expects him to. There is a flicker of romance between Brad and Ann Rogers, that older sister, but that doesn't get anywhere, either.

Has Informative Side

There are long aerial sequences in the film, during which a considerable insight into the art of handling planes is conveyed to the audience and more to the student-pilots. A nice vein of "dumbbell" comedy runs through the piece with Maxie Rosenbloom, a faithful "grease monkey" as its chief protagonist.

Randolph Scott and Preston Foster are cast as the rival airmen and perform their duties robustly. Margaret Lindsay is the girl and the youthful fliers are impersonated with high success by a group of unknowns, bearing the names of George Ernest, Kane Richmond, Robert Shaw and Douglas Wood. George Ernest seems to be a youngster worth watching. It is he who brings the boys back after they have got into trouble flying over a canyon. The business of freeing the parachute from the tree at the edge of a towering precipice is a little hard to take, but many in the audience shrieked gently when it came off.

The stage bill at the Capitol this week is really something to talk about. That gay and slightly ribald jester, Lew Parker, presides over the goings-on and takes part in most of them himself, aided and abetted by a lusty crew of stoo of both genders, scattered all over the house, as well as by several of the acts.

Ann Rutherford Charms

The headline attraction, as goes without saying, is Ann Rutherford, the Polly Benedict of the Hardy family pictures and soon to be seen as Scarlett O'Hara's younger sister in "Gone With the Wind." Miss Rutherford is one of the most fascinating personalities that have come out of Hollywood to a Washington stage. Charming and vivacious, she also is a cultured, articulate and entertaining young woman, who knows what she wants to say and says it beautifully. Miss Rutherford, booked to her own and the Capital's surprise on short notice, has no act. She merely confides glibly and intelligently in the audience and wins it overwhelmingly by her graciousness and poise. Miss Rutherford needs no act.

Among those assisting Mr. Parker are the Nathane brothers, instrumentalist-acrobats, who bow a fiddle and pick a mandolin while executing their head-to-head balancing feats and other gymnastics; Gypsy Farmer, a songstress, who has a very definite way with her; Pritchard and Lord, ballroom dancers, who mix in a little classical tap dancing for good measure; Leon LaFell and company, comics with a bundle of laughs, and the Rhythm Rockets in a variety of routines. Sprinkle these with Lew Parker's skits and brief monologues, and you have a stage bill of almost legitimate revue proportions.

The Fox Movietone News, depicting the surrender of Warsaw for the first time and military activities along the Maginot Line, completes a program that is extremely easy to take, even if the feature picture doesn't go anywhere in particular.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 20 (1939).—Things are happening fast to Carole Landis. Not only will she soon change her name to Mrs. Kenny Morgan but today she landed the top femme spot in Hal Roach's "One Million B. C." This is the prehistoric fantasy which D. W. Griffith will supervise and Hal Roach direct. Having D. W. Griffith guide her in her first big break is particularly lucky for the shapely Landis. The original maestro of the movies has developed more acting talent in his time than any other star-maker.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Victor Mature and Lon Chaney, Jr., are also in the cast and it is interesting to hear that Lon will have the role of a man 55 years old—giving him a chance to follow in his father's footsteps with make-up. Brilliant dialogue won't be a feature of this film. Almost all the talk is limited to gibberish in a dead language. If all goes well, the entire troupe takes off the first of the week for the prehistoric locations at Logan[illegible] Nev.

Talked with Mervyn Leroy, who is back from his month's holiday. He had a grand time resting at White Sulphur Springs and taking in the shows, but not for a second did the dynamic Leroy forget movies. He went to the rodeo show at Madison Square Garden and saw 16-year-old Sydnay Oakley, who, he says, is the female edition of Gene Autry. "Not since I discovered Lana Turner," said Mervyn, "have I seen as pretty a young girl. Moreover, she rides, ropes steers and does everything that any cowgirl ever did on the range." He is making exhaustive tests of her and hopes to bring her to Hollywood later. She will return first to Texas Christian to complete her college course.

The two best pals in Hollywood are Cary Grant and Randy Scott, who have shared bachelor quarters for years at the beach without a single rift. But they've never lined up for a picture together until today, when Leo McCarey signed Randy for the third angle with Cary and Irene Dunne, in "My Favorite Wife." Thoughtful of Leo, I'd say, to keep their friendship going on the studio lot, since they're due to break up their long housekeeping routine soon when Cary marries Phyllis Brooks and moves into Norma Talmadge's former home. The McCarey picture should really be a swell chance for Randy, because Leo certainly knows how to turn out hits and Garson Kanin is a real director.

Chatter in Hollywood: If Joan Crawford had had a wild boar in her house, there couldn't have been more excitement in the voice that telephoned to say a baby, and a little tiny one, had been heard crying at Joan's for the past four weeks! What's more, it seems that the Infant's Service Bureau car (a valet service for triangular pants) was a daily caller at Joan's home. But what sounded like a swell scoop of Joan's adopting a baby was quickly punctured when we called her at the studio. "I have house guests," she laughingly explained, a girl friend of mine from the East and her baby. I suppose it sounded like a big secret because my friend has wanted to rest—in fact she has begged off from meeting even my friends."

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Baby Leroy is threatened with pneumonia in Albany, Ga., where he is on location. Billie Lee replaces him in "The Biscuit Eater" cast, but as soon as the little boy is well, he'll get his comeback chance in another movie; the most glamorous audience in days helped swell the Polish relief coffers to $10,000 at the Philharmonic concert; Madeleine Carroll paid $500 for the original sketch by Alexander Brook on the program cover; Stokowski not only gave his services as an artist, but donated $1,000. Ronald Colman also gave $500. Just about everyone was there, with the girls looking their prettiest, Hedy Lamarr, Irene Dunne, Myrna Loy, Anita Louise, to name a few of the femme lovelies. Mrs. Edward Robinson, who worked so hard for the concert's success, entertained the artists, Nelson Eddy, Rose Bampton, Dalles Frantz and some hundred others at a buffet supper after the concert.

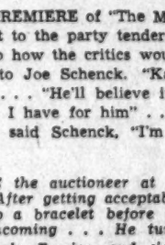
Al Jolson leaves next week for his goodwill tour through South America; Townsend Netcher, with Rose Hobart, (new combination) and the Morton Downeys greeting friends at Chasen's; Charles Einfield's good-looking son and heir entertaining with a birthday party, with mother and father in attendance. The cake was delicious. I know, because I ate some.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Oct. 20.—Just an open letter to all you women who have written me notes backing up my few words about trying to keep our boys from marching "over there." It was heart-warming too, to hear Lindbergh's speech along the same lines—for Lindy has proved his courage and so his comments must be taken at their face value. You know, and I know, that nearly two-thirds of the wealth of this country is owned by women—even though most of it has been put into the hands of men to safeguard and keep for us. Now we must do the same thing for the greater wealth that is ours—our Sons! Which is much more important than safeguarding our money—for without one the latter is pretty hollow. So let's put our power together, our wealth, our Motherhood—let's forget petty jealousies, publicity-seeking, lust for power, and co-operate in an organized, determined stand to stay out of this European mess and keep our boys from marching Over There.



HOPPER

Talked to David Niven on the "Raffles" set. Says he wants to leave without any fuss because there's a chance that when he gets over there he may be told he's not needed and he'll have no place to go, except back to the Hollywood front—and we'll all be happy . . . Double marquee billing at Oriental Theater, "Bachelor Mother" —"Daughters Courageous." Nice work if you can get it! . . . Neat job of shushing a few weeks ago when Artie Shaw pushed his valet-chauffeur and then fired him—just because the latter met Judy Garland at his boss' rehearsal and invited her out for a hamburger . . . Rudy Vallee's getting ready to move to Hollywood. He's got the house, and when he played in Chicago recently he spent days buying furniture the same way he takes his girls—wholesale . . . Marc Connelly was listening to the glowing accounts of the Inca Temple Jack Otterson designed for "Green Hell." "It's so authentic," remarked Marc, "the Inca isn't even dry on it yet." . . . Hope you won't mind if I describe our latest glamorous star? (not you): Mercy, no! "Her face is Vogue—but her mind is Vague!"

Funny if George M. Cohan, who doesn't care much for movies, returns to Warner Brothers to do the life story of the man who started the League of Decency—Cardinal Hayes. Cohan will not come back to do a picture with Mickey Rooney, as rumored . . . Over the week-end Lili Damita got her biggest thrill when, for the first time, she raced with Errol in his yacht Sirocco . . . Among things I won't forget, because we have too few of these homey touches, was Clark Gable taking time out at John and Kay Cromwell's cocktail party to kiss Carole, who looked stunning in black. When a husband kisses his wife in public, and not on the screen, that's news! Silly, isn't it? Nice seeing Maggie Sullavan, too. She's been off the screen too long. And don't miss Kay Johnson Cromwell's performance in "The Real Glory," she added glory!

Alabama Picked Over Tennessee Today

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

A refreshing note in the crass business of horse racing has been sounded at Berryville, Va., where the patriarchal Mr. B. B. Jones, master of Audley Farm, has put sentiment above cash. He is withholding his favorites from the auction sale that will retire Audley Farm from the breeding business.

POVICH

One hundred and thirty-five head of stock will go to the highest bidders next week, but the auctioneer's hammer will not fall on four horses which Mr. Jones at various times promised a life of ease in reward for faithful service. No bids will be accepted for Princess Doreen, the fine Audley mare whose likeness adorns Mr. Jones' personal stationery; for Ethel Gray, a 23-year-old brood mare who long ago endeared herself to the master of Audley; for Gallant Knight, a stallion who served him well both on the track and in the stud, and for a venerable old mare named Thelma E.

Particularly is Mr. Jones attached to Thelma E., the first horse he ever owned and often has he refused to put a price on her. Mr. Jones went into racing with Thelma E., scored his first success with her and now regards the mare with a degree of reverence. Snapper Garrison had a part in the launching of Mr. Jones as a horse owner.

Snapper Garrison Recommended Buying Thelma E

A one-time telegraph operator who served as a train dispatcher, Mr. Jones acquired sudden wealth in Texas oil field ventures and it was while vacationing at Hot Springs that he met up with Garrison, famed jockey of his day. Garrison recommended that Jones buy the filly Thelma E. as the nucleus of a racing stable.

Stake after stake fell to the speed of the filly and Jones was proud of his purchase, but as yet he had never seen his horse run. His trainer was campaigning Thelma E. in the East and with a rich New York stake on the schedule Jones decided to come East for the race. He arrived in New York and discovered his trainer boiling mad.

"I've scratched our horse, Mr. Jones," he said. "Old Man Vosburgh, the track handicapper, has saddled her with 123 pounds. She's never carried more than 107 and it's back-breaking weight. I won't let her run with that kind of package."

Jones, who had come East to see his horse run, was disappointed. He insisted that Thelma E. be re-entered. "Get the best jockey you can, pay a couple hundred dollars extra if you have to, but put her in the race. Garrison told me she's a game filly."

Jones Keeps Promise to Noted Filly

In the stall before the race, Jones patted his horse. "Win this race for me and you'll never have to carry another pound on your back as long as I am living," he actually told the filly.

Well, down in front that day came Thelma E., 123 pounds and all, and a jubilant Mr. Jones kept his word. To visitors to Audley Farm the other day, he told the story.

"She's over there in yonder field right now," he said. "She hasn't even had a saddle on her back since that day. She hasn't been bred for 11 years, and she's not being sold in this sale. I gave that mare my promise that day and I'd be an ungrateful cuss if I didn't keep it."

In 1935 the purple and lavender colors of Audley Farms disappeared from the Nation's tracks when Mr. Jones retired to the breeding end of racing. But for 15 years they were familiar silks in virtually every large stake in the country. At one time the Audley Farm was the largest racing establishment in the United States.

Seventy horses were in the Audley racing string a few years ago, racing in four separate divisions under Trainers Kay Spence, Miller Henderson, Specs Crawford and Bob Smith. It was after serving the Audley Farm that Smith took a job as trainer for Mrs. Dodge Sloan and developed the sensational Cavalcade.

One Thing the S. P. C. A. Agent Didn't Know

As long as we seem to be on the topic of horse racing, did you ever hear the story of the late Bill Daily's run-in with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals?

Daily, a horse trainer for 60 years, was not above "tubbing" a horse—using scalding hot water to contract the muscles of a steed's ailing legs and thus prolong the horse's racing career. It was the old-fashioned method of "firing" and "nerving" horses and the S. P. C. A. was hot on Daily's trail.

One day at Benning, as he was "tubbing" an ailing nag, an S. P. C. A. agent popped from behind a thicket and presented the venerable Daily with a summons. Cruelty to animals was the complaint.

"Sure, and what are ya tarking about?" inquired Daily in his thick brogue.

"You know what I'm talking about. You're tubbing that horse in scalding water," replied the agent.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 20.—Jeff Dickson, the fabulous Natchez, Miss., boy who became the Tex Rickard of Europe after being everything from a movie cameraman to a shiek's adviser, will switch his promoting to the United States for the duration of the war, he announced today.

CONSIDINE

His huge Palais de Sport in Paris has been taken over by the French government for use as an enlistment office and gas mask distribution point. His Salle Wagram, a smaller arena, is now the headquarters for the volunteer firemen who are being trained to pounce on fire caused by aerial bombs, if any. All of his sports promotions, from hockey to boxing to professional tennis to ice carnivals, have come to a halt.

This is the third time since 1936 that his arenas have been closed down. One morning in the-Paris-of-the-spring of 1936 the debonair Dickson, whose Natchez drawl has somehow resisted the ravages of a French accent, sauntered into his 20,000-seat arena and found 12,000 soldiers there. He tried to explain that he had a big boxing match coming up, and please to get the hell out, but the commandant explained that the troops were assigned to put down the then current riots between the Lefts and the Rights—and that they wouldn't budge to make way for M. Dickson's type of lefts and rights.

War Engulfs Sports in France

Again at the Munich crisis Jeff was given the Gaelic equivalent of the bum's rush and his place used for the distribution of uniforms and the dispatching of the hundreds of thousands who volunteered at that time. And now it is a barracks again. All of Jeff's fighters, bike riders, hockey players, rasslers and who knows what else are in the army.

"C'est la guerre," Jeff drawled today, with a south of France accent, looking out from a nice furnished room in the tower of Ma Waldorf's boarding house. "When they go to war over there, there's just no room for sports. It costs me money, but that isn't important . . . when you remember what it's like to see those old guys limping up to the Palais and begging to enlist. You never saw anything like it," the good-looking former doughboy mused.

The Dicksons lived in what is now Mississippi about a hundred years before it had a name, but Jeff isn't finding it very easy to become an American promoter. In the past month he has visited every large city in the country looking for a place to begin operations. He went into Canada, too, but found his would-be clients too preoccupied with the war. He liked Detroit the best, next to New York.

In New York he has found pardonable resistance from Mike Jacobs and John Kilpatrick.

Jacobs, who had a pretty tough time getting them, will not permit any of the fighters under contract to him to fight for Dickson out of town. Mike has every champion from Louis to Escobar.

No Changes Planned at Garden

Kilpatrick, head of Madison Square Garden and a close friend of Dickson, told him that the Garden planned to make no changes in its present policy and that it was quite satisfied with its arrangement whereby it gets half of Jacobs' profits from all fights—in return for giving him exclusive rights in the Garden and at the weather-beaten Garden Bowl.

Until he finds something to his liking Dickson is gathering together the loose ends of his bewildering memoirs and thinking of that dear Paree and the things he knew abroad.

"They're all in it," he said. "Nobody's heard from Schmeling, but it's a cinch that they've got him somewhere up near the front, maybe boxing exhibitions in camps to keep up the spirits of the men. Carpentier is going to be an instructor in the air force. He won't fly. They want young kids to fly those fighting planes. Thil is stuck in some camp, waiting. Andre Lenglet, he fought over here, served the final day of his year's conscription the day before the war began. Peter Kane's in the army and Farr's flying for the R. A. F.

"Funny thing," he said, "I promoted about 35 Franco-German sports events each year . . . You know, in boxing, hockey and so on. The German sports writers used to cover a lot of my shows at Paris and I remember how they and the French writers would get together after the shows, comparing notes and maybe writing each other's stories when they got a little stiff. It's pretty hard to think of Gaston Benac, of the Paris Soir, fighting Arno Hellmis, of the 12 Heures Blatt . . . pretty hard."

Both Teams Undefeated And Untied

Notre Dame-Navy Clash Adds Color To National Grid Schedule Today

By Bill Boni

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Oct. 20.—Take equal parts of national significance, colorful spectacle, tradition and its attendant ivy, and quick-changing fortune, mix well, and you have a composite picture of tomorrow's four principal college football games.

The most important game nationally, and one that has brought the rose bowl into discussion for the first time this season, is the clash at Knoxville between Tennessee and Alabama. Both unbeaten and untied, with Tennessee in addition untested, they go into action with the volunteers banking on an attack built around George (Bad News) Cafego, and Alabama relying on a backfield squad that includes sophomores Jimmy Nelson, John Hanson and Paul Spencer and Veterans Charley Boswell and Herky Mosley. Enthusiastic southerners see the winner as Southeastern Conference champion and Eastern representative in the Rose Bowl.

Color will be the chief lure for the 80,000-odd customers due to see heavily-favored Notre Dame battle Navy in Cleveland's municipal stadium. Tradition and ivy are wrapped around the Harvard-Pennsylvania duel at Cambridge Mass., first major game for the Cantabs. The gridiron's rapid ups and downs are illustrated best by the fact that Texas Aggies, 1939's No. 1 Southwest Conference team, is a pronounced favorite over Texas Christian, No. 1 team in the Nation a year ago.

Switching from generalities to specific instances, this corner emerges from its bomb-proof shelter with the following predictions (probable attendance in parentheses):

Tennessee-Alabama (38,000) → 'Bama has built its defense to stop Cafeno. The Crimson Tide's attack is spread over more men. This is the one game Tennessee has been pointing for, yet we like 'Bama by a shade.

Harvard-Penn (80,000)—The Crimson has had only two minor games, but got through both nobly without Torbie MacDonald, its best halfback and one of the shiftiest runners in the East. Penn's hospital list is awesome, but may be deceptive. Harvard.

Notre Dame-Navy (78,750)—That's a lot of people. Hard to see how they'll witness anything but a victory for Notre Dame.

Texas Christian-Texas A. & M. (25,000)—Against Temple, T. C. U. showed passes but little else. The Aggies, with a balanced offense.

Yale-Army (60,000)—Tip-off on Army's early performances was the fact that Rooney, a guard, was converted into a fullback after the first two games. Trusting the Kaydets have settled down, Army.

Minnesota-Ohio State (55,000)—The Buckeyes have played better fundamental football than has been usual with them. Ohio State, in a toss-up.

Tulane-North Carolina (35,000)—Tulane hasn't been scored on through the line in ten games. The Tarheels may tally on a Stirnweiss pass, but Tulane has the definite edge.

St. Mary's-Santa Clara (Sunday, 55,000)—The Gails of St. Mary's to throw the Santa Clara Broncs.

Cornell-Penn State (10,000)—Cornell scheduled this largely as a stop-gap before Ohio StaSte. The Nittany Lions might turn that into a gap before Ohio State. The Nitt-

Oklahoma-Kansas (20,000)—Oklahoma to continue unbeaten.

Pitt-Duquesne (30,000)—By tomorrow night the Dukes no longer

ORAL HILDEBRAND

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 20 (INS).—Oral Hildebrand, New York Yankee pitcher, and six women were reported seriously injured tonight in the collision of Hildebrand's car with a station wagon in which the women were driving.

Hildebrand, suffering severe cuts and bruises and internal injuries, was taken with the women to Methodist Hospital, where it was said two of the women might die.

The night was foggy and visibility low when the two cars collided. Hildebrand was bound for his home

By Jack Munhall.

Burly Mike Monchlovich, George Washington's sophomore center, who hadn't carried a football since his high school days, plucked a Citadel fumble from the air in the third period last night and galloped 42 yards to a touchdown that gave the Colonials an unconvincing 13-to-7 victory at Griffith Stadium.

While 6,000 fans looked on with bated breath wondering whether the 190-pound Crucible, Pa., law student, would last the distance, Monchlovich barely beat the Citadel safety man, Elmer Browning, to the goal line, stumbling the last 5 yards to hit pay dirt in a comical sprawl.

Dives in for Score

And as Monchlovich hit head and hands first on the goal line George Washington won a ball game in spite of itself. It won a game it easily could have lost, though there was none at the scene who could have compared the Southern visitors to Bill Reinhart's heavier and faster team.

George Washington could have lost because last night it was one of the most disappointing teams that ever represented the G-Street school, a team that bobbled away all its honestly gained scoring chances and then was lucky enough to get its touchdowns on two lightning thrusts.

Batson Runs 60 Yards

Just as startling and somewhat incredible as Monchlovich's jittery jaunt was the 60-yard off-tackle slant on which stocky little Ken Batson picked up the Colonials' first touchdown to narrow The Citadel's lead, gained in the first period, to 7-6. Less than half a minute after the kickoff opening the third period, Batson tore through a quick opening between his own right guard and tackle, headed for the sidelines and continued unmolested until Browning threw him to the ground over the goal.

Most of the fans hadn't even got down to business after the distracting intermission when Batson, who looks like a bouncing fire plug when he churns his chubby legs downfield, catapulted through the line and was gone. Browning was the only Citadel player in his way after he passed the line of scrimmage and Batson outran him. On the 10 Browning took his desperate leap which only gave Batson added impetus. Lud Urick's place kick for the extra point missed, and G. W. trailed, 7-6, because ther pass defense in the first half had been pierced like water dripping through a strainer.

Catholic U. Plays Bobcats At Brookland

Meighan, West Virginia Wesleyan's Ace Passer, May Check Cards

Ed Meighan, one of the East's outstanding sophomore backs last year and currently a name on the all-America check list, is expected to prove a serious test for Catholic University's weak pass defense at Brookland Stadium today when he starts pitching pigskins for West Virginia Wesleyan.

Game time is 2:30. Probable attendance 7,000.

Meighan, though he is touted as a good runner in addition to his forward passing ability, is scarcely deemed able to more than threaten the Cardinals' three-game winning streak and C. U. should win by at least two touchdowns.

There seems to be entirely too much power in the heavier Cardinal team for the West Virginians who are weaker than in recent years. Even without Art Sabo, a fine running guard, and Joe Guyon, their flashiest halfback, Coach Bergman's Cardinals are an exceptionally strong eleven along the ground and today C. U. fans may be surprised to see them display a dangerous passing attack for the first time this season.

Frank Krawczel, a senior halfback from Shenandoah, Pa., has been groomed all week in spot passing and showed surprising ability. He may be the successful climax of Bergman's season-long quest of a passer accurate enough to lend deception to C. U.'s devastating land attack. Krawczel is not included in the starting line-up but probably will see early action along with other Cardinal reserves if the first stringers amass the comfortable first-period lead for which Bergman hopes.

Besides Meighan, a 168-pounder from McDonald, Pa., the Bobcats' starting backfield will comprise Right Halfback Joseph Andrick, Fullback James Cain and Quarterback Addison McKown. This

Armstrong Stops Fontaine in Third Round at Seattle

Seattle, Oct. 20 (AP).—Henry Armstrong, the world's welterweight champion, scored a technical knockout over Richie Fontaine, of Missoula, Mont., tonight in the third round of their scheduled 15-round championship fight.

The Los Angeles Negro hammered his challenger to the mat five times in the second and once in the third before delivering the blow that brought a towel from Fontaine's corner.

Central Defeats Roosevelt In Interhigh Clash, 20-0; Eastern Beats Anacostia, 12-0

Riders Go Scoreless For 4th Consecutive Time; Kolker Stars

By Bill Burnett

Roosevelt High kept its perfect scoring record intact yesterday as it faced Central's 1938 interhigh champions in their first start in defense of their crown.

The burly Riders went scoreless for the fourth consecutive time this season as Central chalked up a 20-0 triumph. A 37-yard dash in the first quarter, an intercepted pass good for 45 yards in the second quarter, and a freak aerial in the final quarter accounted for the scoring.

Though turned back as effectively as at any time this season, Roosevelt's warriors nevertheless showed all the "fight" that had been lacking in previous starts. And for the first 3 minutes of the opening period it appeared they would take the jump on their heavily-favored antagonists.

Bernie Kolker sparked the early advance with straight gains of 5, 8, and 8 yards, bringing the ball to midfield, but there the going got too tough and he was forced to kick. His boot went to the Central 10, where a punting duel started between Benny Steiner, Central quarterback, and Kolker.

With less than a minute of the first period remaining, Martin tucked the ball under his arm on the Roosevelt 37 and set off in search of the Mount Pleasanters' first score. He left his interference at the 25, picked up a blocker who took out Roosevelt's Danny Boothe on the 15, and jogged over without

Parkers Score Both Touchdowns in Last-Half Rally

Eastern High's football team definitely stamped itself as a title contender in the Eastern division of the interhigh series by defeating a scrappy, never-say-die Anacostia eleven, 12 to 0, yesterday at Eastern Stadium.

As 2,500 Eastern rooters voiced their approval, the Parkers scored their first touchdown in the third period after a sustained drive had carried them 82 yards. They concluded their scoring in the final quarter when Buddy Yocum passed to Eddie Teague, who took the ball on Anacostia 15 and raced the remaining distance to score standing up.

The victory preserved Eastern's first-place standing in the Eastern division while the defeat can hardly be expected to erase Anacostia from the title picture, as the Indians have only to face Roosevelt and Wilson in future interhigh play.

Anacostia threw a scare into the Eastern camp in the opening quarter when, after the kick-off was carried to the Indian 37, Art Faircloth, big Anacostia fullback, whipped four bullet-like heaves to waiting teammates for three first downs and this took the ball to the Eastern 15-yard line. Here, however, Faircloth was thrown for a 12-yard loss and the threat subsided. Faircloth's kick was blocked and the winners took possession of the ball on the 22.

After thus taking possession, the Easterners began to march and before the Anacostia line called a halt

Eli Given Even Chance To Beat Cadets; Aerial Battle Forecast

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 20.—On a strictly comparative basis, which usually doesn't mean a thing, Yale's football team is given at least an even chance of trouncing Army when they clash in the Yale Bowl tomorrow before some 60,000 fans.

The Elis opened their season two weeks ago and beat Columbia, 10 to 7. Last Saturday Army had all it could do to tie the New Yorkers in the closing minutes of the game, 6 to 6. On the strength of this, there are many who predict a Yale victory.

An aerial battle was forecast, both of the elevens depending upon this department to a large extent. It may be that the team with the best forward-passing defense will be the victor.

Star End Scores Touchdown as G. U. Frosh Win Easily

Birch Rod Beats No Competition Easily in Laurel Feature

Gelding Pays Only $3.50 In Feature

Jockey Simpson Suspended for Rest of Meeting At Laurel Track

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 20.—Birch Rod, not as fashionable in schoolrooms as of yore, retains its popularity on the race track. A 3-year-old son of Pompey with that name attached gave a lesson in the three A's (running, running and runningmatic) here this afternoon. Flying the colors of George D. Widener, Birch Rod turned ina report that showed a big "A" in speed and made his opposition look like so many fugitives from a dunce cap.

At the end of a mile and 70 yards battle, called the Crumpton Purse but better known as the fifth race, Birch Rod held a length and a half advantage over the Milky Way Farms' No Competition. A half length farther back came E. R. Bradley's Big Pebble, looking the part of a grain of sand while running third.

Birch Rod's speed was no secret among the 8,000 customers present and was the object of frequent and concerned stabs of the heavy money. When all had been said and done, the gelding paid a $3.50 mutuel. His time was 1:43 1-5.

Birch Rod and No Competition had a little battle in the first furlong. Both jockeys tried to get to the front, but at the turn Mower swung out and circled his rival to take command. Mower then rated his mount while Wallace, aboard No Competition, did the same. Approaching the stretch, No Competition began to move up and Mower went to a drive.

In the stretch run, Big Pebble rallied and came on along with No Competition, but the best this pair could do was to narrow the margin of the winner.

Jockey C. F. Simpson was suspended for the remainder of the meeting for "an unsatisfactory ride in the previous race of Crack Favor.—The stewards announced that his case would be referred to the Maryland Racing Commission.

Simpson brought Crack Favor home in today's first race, a test for Maryland-breds, and the colt paid a $13 mutuel. In doing so, he downed Howard Bruce's Cherry's Child.

Those who put Crack Favor with King Pharamond, easy winner of the third race, took down a $54.60 mutuel in the daily double.

Bashi Bazouk And Despondent Run Dead Heat

Jamaica, N. Y., Oct. 20 (AP).—Marshall Field's Bashi Bazouk, with Don Meade up, and Ogden Phipps' Despondent, piloted by Johnny Deering, reached the finish of the Sergt. Byrne (Class "C") Handicap with their heads bobbing in such unison that the result was the first dead heat of the meeting here today. Bashi Bazouk was favorite at 9 to 5, while his rival closed at 6 to 1. Five lengths behind the pair came Parkwood Stable's rank outsider, Sturdy Duke, to annex the show.

The dead heat pair completed the 6-furlong trip in 1:12 1-5.

Iowa Drills in Mud

Iowa City, Iowa, Oct. 20 (AP).—The University of Iowa football team went through a dreary, slippery session on line scrimmage and signal drill today in its first workout of the season on a muddy field.

Know the Jockeys—III

Jockey Maurice Peters

JOCKEY PETERS

If this young man had not been small, he probably would have been a cowboy, but at 112 pounds he makes a very good living following the saddle trade on the Nation's big-time race tracks and not on the ranch. He is strictly a Western product, like so many other good jockeys, including Earl Sande and Don Meade. He cannot remember the first time he rode a horse or whether it was a pony or a horse, for that matter. He was born at Brantford, N. Dak., and did his early race riding at the country fairs (known as "bull rings" to the horsemen) around his native neighborhood. There came a day when a horseman shipped his stable to New Orleans, and Peters, already called "Moose," went along. He rode his first winner that winter aboard a horse named General Campbell. How many winners he has ridden since he can't recall. He admits to 22 years of age and refers to Seattle, Wash., as his present home town. Peters is under contract to William du Pont, jr., owner of the Foxcatcher Farms Stable and builder of Delaware Park's race track.

CRACK FAVOR, off alertly but lacking early speed, came up on outside while improving position approaching stretch and wore down CHERRY'S CHILD in closing sixteenth. CHERRY'S CHILD was hard ridden, worked way to contention, took command in midstretch, but could not resist winner while closing gamely. TELL ME, forward factor from start, was pinched back entering stretch and was held safe thereafter. HENRY TAIT saved ground from start while running close up, but could not better position while put to punishment in closing eighth. GIGI was shuffled back at break and closed full of run. POLLY MACDUN went lame and was pulled up.

SPINACH, steadied along closest to early pace of WAR PORT and rated when LONE GALLANT and KINGSEM took command during second mile, responded gamely when placed to hard drive and wore down KINGSEM on flat after final fence. KINGSEM lost ground in early stages while strongly restrained, moved up boldly to take lead after a mile, but could not resist winner while under strong handling to close. LONE GALLANT gained lead when WAR PORT stopped, saved ground when displaced and was held safe. PIMOCHIO began to weaken after a mile. LATERAL PASS lost rider at fourth fence. CHATTED, slow to begin, was taken in on rail approaching stretch, responded gamely when placed to punishment and won going away on inside. SACK, first away, set good pace, swung out entering stretch and was best of others. CHARITABLE was rushed up to press SACK'S pace and closed gamely.

BIRCH ROD, taken wide at first turn to get to front of NO COMPETITION, was rated while setting pace to stretch, but had to be driven in closing stages. NO COMPETITION was closest to pace for final mile and held on gamely. BIG PEBBLE saved ground and showed good effort while closing gamely.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—THE THRUSH, $14.30, $7.00, $3.70; CAREFUL MISS, $4.00, $2.80; LADY INFINITE, $3.10.

THE THRUSH saved ground while close up in early stages, came to outside of LADY INFINITE to take command and barely lasted ahead of CAREFUL MISS' closing bid. The latter, badly blocked and forced to take up while racing on rail at far turn, rallied to come between horses while bettering position and closed with bold rush. LADY INFINITE, hard used while racing with PATSEY BEGONE, weakened in closing stages.

PETIT JEAN went to front with rush at once, drew far out and was not threatened at any stage, winning with speed in reserve. ROCKY MEADOW, forced to be taken back entering backstretch, came willingly when clear and closed with good courage. DOHOEV improved position readily along backstretch and came with good energy in final test. FLYING CENTAUR was hard ridden and faltered right at end. SIR TIME was slow to begin and hung in final drive.

Sellout for Notre Dame-Navy Game in Cleveland Today

Coach Layden Fearful of Navy Upset

Neither Coach Will Predict Victory as Teams Take Final Drill; Expect 80,000

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 20.—Onrushing Notre Dame and challenging Navy worked out today in Cleveland Stadium before 80,000 seats which tomorrow will hold a capacity crowd.

Both Elmer Layden, head coach for the "Fighting Irish," and Maj. Emery E. (Swede) Larson, frog-voiced Navy mentor, declined to astound anyone by predicting victory. They figured, publicly at least, that it would be as close as corn on a cob.

Larson looked over his unbeaten but tied hopefuls and pulled Lou Mayo, 160 pounds of whirling dervish from Prestonburg, Ky., out of the bag to fill the quarterback spot normally assigned the ailing Emmett Wood.

Layden Warns Irish

Remembering how the Irish escaped by a cat's whisker against Purdue, Georgia Tech and Southern Methodist—Notre Dame topped the first two by three points, the last by only one—Layden observed:

"We've got to be right up on our toes all the time or they'll run us out into Lake Erie—and if they ever get us on water we're licked.

"Three of the five touchdowns against us this season have been on breaks—and I don't think they'll occur all through the season."

Answered Larson, whose middies toppled William and Mary and Virginia before last week's scoreless tie with Dartmouth:

"We didn't come down here to be a doormat."

Game a Sellout

Navy has never been a Notre Dame doormat, but has taken only three and lost nine against the Irish.

The game is a sellout. The 78,750 paying customers have plunked an estimated $157,500 into the cash drawer. The schools will split after paying $5,000 stadium rent.

The weather man said showers were possible but temperatures should be in the lower 60s.

Giants Receive Hubbell's Contract

New York, Oct. 20 (AP).—Receipt of a signed contract for the 1940 season from Carl Hubbell, veteran Giant southpaw, was announced today by club officials.

Hubbell, who won 11 and lost 9 games last season, signed for considerably less than the $22,000 he was paid for this year's work. The club sent him a blank contract and told him to write in his own figures. He did, and they were approved by President Horace Stoneham. Outsiders believe Hubbell will receive $15,000 next season.

Redskins Look Beyond Tilt With Pirates to Packers' Game

The Redskins are looking beyond tomorrow's game with the Pirates at Pittsburgh. Their chief objective is the battle with Green Bay's Packers at Milwaukee eight days distant and Redskin strategy tomorrow will take that game largely into account.

Despite the storm warnings issued by Coach Ray Flaherty who admonished his athletes that the Pirates always have given the Redskins a tough battle at Pittsburgh, an easy game is anticipated for the Washington team.

Victors over the Pirates by a 44-14 score last Sunday, the Redskins this week will be meeting a Pittsburgh team weakened by the sale of their chief backfield threat, Sam Francis. It was Francis' gallops with the ball that prevented a rout of the Pirates in the first half last week when the Pittsburghers scored two touchdowns, thanks to his gains.

At Milwaukee, the Redskins will be meeting their severest test of the season to date with the possibility that defeat may wreck their chances for the Eastern Division championship. Thus Coach Flaherty is not expected to apply any more pressure than is necessary against the Pirates tomorrow.

He is withholding Sammy Baugh from the game despite the fact that Baugh could play if his services were needed, and if the Redskins obtain a commanding lead their veterans are not expected to see much, if any, action in the second half.

Flaherty's aim is a well-rested team to toss against the Packers who as usual, are one of the tough clubs of the league. The Redskins will entrain this afternoon for Pittsburgh and will move into the West immediately following their game with the Pirates to await the Green Bay battle.

Bethesda Scores Over Woodward, 7-6

Scoring on a 25-yard run in the opening period, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High captured its second victory in three starts this season by defeating the Woodward School for Boys, 7 to 6, yesterday in a well-played game on the Monument Grounds.

It was Bill Thompson, Bethesda's shifty halfback who paced his team to victory. He ran around end for 25 yards and the touchdown and then scored the extra point on a foward pass.

Allan Knight, the Woodward quarterback, scored the losers' touchdown in the third quarter when he dashed off tackle and continued his gallop for 40 yards and the score. The extra-point try failed.

The game was played before a sizable crowd and was Woodward's third defeat in as many starts this year.

Eagles to Play Johns Hopkins With One Backfield Substitute

In the somewhat peculiar role of a one-man substitute backfield, George Blanchard may be an important factor in American University's stand against Johns Hopkins at 2:30 this afternoon on the Eagles' field.

Shorn of other backfield reserves by injuries, Coach George Menke will hold Blanchard ready to fill in for any of the four starters who need rest—namely, Otto Streitsberger, Archie Norford, David Thatcher and McClane.

There is a possibility that Jim Flaherty, regular fullback who was injured in the Eagles' 18-0 opening defeat by Randolph-Macon last week, will be able to play part of the game. Captain and star Tackle George Brown and Center Red Rauch are definitely out, however.

Although A. U. enters this important traditional game as a decided underdog, Coach Menke and his squad have been in high spirits and an upset is not beyond the realm of possibility. The temperature of the day will be a factor for if it is hot the Eagle's 18-man squad will be sorely handicapped.

Johns Hopkins, like A. U., has lost its only start 15-0 to Washington College.

Hoya Frosh Easily Defeat W.-M., Norfolk

Strong gG. U. Team Scores 4 Times in Last Quarter to Win, 39-6

Held in check for three quarters by the varsity eleven of William and Mary College, Norfolk Division, Georgetown University's powerful freshmen cut loose with 27 points in the final quarter yesterday to win a 39-to-6 victory at Griffith Stadium.

It was the second straight for Hap Hardell's young Hoyas, who are so good that the Hilltop campus just whispers its praise for fear something will happen before the boys get up to the varsity. They showed to better advantage yesterday than in their 6-to-0 opening defeat of Temple Frosh.

The score favored the G. U. yearlings, 12 to 6, going into the final quarter and the stubborn Little Indians were offering surprising resistance when the deluge of touchdowns descended and turned the battle into a rout. A feature of G. U.'s fourth period surge was a 31-yard scoring run by McLaughlin.

The Little Hoyas were never behind. Before the contest was three minutes old they had a touc down when Fullback Al Kull scored on a 42-yard jaunt. Soon after they had another when End Chris Povica took a long pass in the end zone.

William and Mary came back early in the second quarter to tally its only touchdown. A pass interception by Fred Nardini gave the visitors the ball on their own 29 and then Fullback Joe Britcher started begging passes all over the field. His climatic throw connected with John Peterson on the 7-yard line and the latter crossed the goal line.

After McLaughlin scored G. U.'s first touchdown in the fourth quarter, Doolan intercepted an Indian pass to race 77 yards to pay dirt. Schmitt made the third six-pointer on a reverse and Faehler, on the same play, netted the last G. U. touchdown.

8,000 to Attend Home-coming Game At Lewisburg

Special Dispatch to The Post

Lewisburg, Pa., Oct. 20.—Bucknell University's Bisons will attempt to uphold their tradition of not having lost a home-coming football game in ten years tomorrow afternoon when they play host to undefeated Georgetown University.

More than 8,000 alumni and fans are expected to watch the Bisons try to stop the visitors, who are unbeaten since the start of the 1938 season. In the last two years a 13-to-13 tie by Syracuse is the only blot on the Hoyas' record.

The Bisons, beaten in their first two games, rebounded last week with a convincing 15-to-0 over Albright and are reportedly prepared for their best effort of the season. A victory over Georgetown would insure a successful campaign for Bucknell even though it should lose every other remaining game.

Cadet's Homecoming to Draw 8,000 With Visit of Gen. George Marshall Highlight Of Day's Program; to Be Honored by Salute

By Al Hailey.
A Staff Correspondent.

Lexington, Va., Oct. 20.—Finishing touches were the order of things here today as the Virginia Military Institute prepared o welcome a homecoming crowd of 8,000 persons tomorrow for the thirty-fifth renewal of its intense gridiron rivalry with the Cavaliers of the University of Virginia.

While Coach Pooley Hubert sent his squad through a cautious final dummy scrimmage, the cadet corps staged a rehearsal of the garrison review to be given tomorrow at 11:30 a. m. in honor of Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the United States Army, who will be the guest of Maj. Gen. Charles E. Kilbourne, superintendent of V. M. I., for the day.

Gen. Marshall, an alumnus of the institution and tackle on its 1900 football team, arrives tomorrow. A 17-gun salute will be fired by the cadet battery as he is escorted on the post by the cadet cavalry.

A tense calm pervaded the atmosphere, but it is only the quiet that will precede tomorrow's storm. The Virginia football squad and student body will invade Lexington shortly before the kickoff at 2:30 p. m., and from then on it's anybody's town.

If today's performance of the V. M. I. varsity cross-country team means anything, tomorrow is a good day for the Keydets. The V. M. I. harriers took five out of six first places to defeat Virginia Polytechnic Institute, 16 to 43, in that peculiar reverse-score sport.

Jim Dale, Bill Smelker and Charley Chewning, of V. M. I., finished in a dead heat for first place, covering the 3¾-mile run down the highway from and back to Alumni Field, scene of tomorrow's grid battle, in 21 minutes 27 seconds.

Hubert, who has two backfields at his beck and call—a 162-pound speed quartet and a 178-pound power troupe—plans to start the latter against the powerful Virginia line. The latter will be led by Capt. Paul Shu, V. M. I.'s all-Southern Conference halfback.

Former D. C. Women's Golf Heads Present At Columbia Club

Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, captain of Washington women's intercity golf team, won the President's Plate for the second time in two years yesterday, topping the various committee heads and members of the District Women's Golf Association with a net 80 over the Columbia course.

Mrs. Dowdell didn't waste any time with apologies for the team's defeat at the hands of Philadelphia on Wednesday as she played the out nine in 43 and the back nine in 44 for an 87, and deducted a 7 handicap for the winning score.

The annual tourney for the working committee members was marked by a luncheon that followed with seven of the eight past presidents of the association attending and speaking briefly on the past activities of the District women golfers.

Mrs. Frailey Speaks

Mrs. Charles L. Frailey, of Chevy Chase, who handled the affairs in 1915, when the women golfers were a part of the men's group, and then became the first president of the independent association in 1923, was featured speaker. Other former presidents present included Mrs. H. A. Knox, Congressional, who competed in the event; Mrs. W. S. Corby, donor of the Corby Cup; Mrs. F. R. Keefer, the three-time president, who won fifth low net in the tourney with 104—19—85; Elizabeth Harris, Chevy Chase, and Mrs. R. W. Payne, Congressional. Mrs. C. K. Wing was the only former prexy not present.

Low gross in the plate play went to the Mid-Atlantic champion, Mrs. Walter R. Stokes, a member of the rules committee, who had a pair of 43's for an 86 despite an eight on the twelfth hole. Marion Brown had 47, 42—89.

Charlotte Hall, Georgetown Prep Clash

Cadet Corps Watches Final Drill Before Crucial Tilt Today

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlotte Hall, Md., Oct. 20.—Backed by the cheers of the cadet corps which attended practice en masse this afternoon, the Charlotte Hall Military Academy football team raced through its final tune-up drill preparatory to invading Garrett Park tomorrow for its annual clash with Georgetown Prep.

Despite damaging injuries to key players, Coach Shel Ehringer's charges exuded a quiet determination as they ran through signals and a brief period of dummy scrimmage. Definite underdogs in tomorrow's game, the Cadets seemed to have arrived at an ideal mental set to make the battle a real one.

That Ehringer intends to play defensive football against the little Hoyas became evident when he had Sam Burch, Elliot Dent and Jim Crueger go through a lengthy punting session.

Johnny Watson, Washington boy, will be the Cadets' acting captain in the game.

Tech Beats St. John's, 6-0, for First Victory

Cockrille Scores From 3-Yard Line

Drive From Midfield Results in Game's Only Score; First Triumph in 3 Games

Beaten in three previous starts, McKinley High finally found its way into the victory column yesterday when it scored in the first quarter and held on desperately for a 6-0 triumph over St. John's.

Don Cockrille, tall quarterback of the Maroon, pushed across the only touchdown of the game after a drive from midfield that swept St. John's injury-depleted ranks before it. The final plunge was from the 3-yard marker.

Minus its sophomore sensation, Frank Cady, whose shoulder was seriously injured in the Johnnies' loss to Central, and Ed Fogarty, another casualty, St. John's was completely shackled by the rampaging Manual Trainers. It managed for several huge gains, however, the longest being a 40-yard advance on a second period aerial, Tom Chisari to Joe Daly. In the third quarter St. John's reeled off a pair of 30-yard dashes by young Steve Burns, but each went for naught. The loss of Cady, their chief kicker, was the Johnnies main weakness.

That Tech finally brought home a victory for its new coach, Artie Wondrack, was mainly due to the revised line-up the former Maryland gridder put on the field. The superior weight of the public high lads was put to use for the first time.

they had reached the 15-yard mark. This drive was sparked by the fine running of Ray Soo, who reeled off an end run of 22 yards and Francis Hallama, whose line bucking played havoc with the center of Anacostia's line.

The Parkers muffed an excellent scoring opportunity in the early moments of the second quarter when the big Eastern line broke through Anacostia's second stringers to deflect the ball outside on the Anacostia 15. Here Eastern attempted to pass its way to a score but three successive passes went astray and Anacostia took the ball on downs. Faircloth punted 50 yards to greatly relieve the Indian rooters.

It was an intercepted pass which paved the way for the Parkers' final touchdown. Soo put himself in front of one of Faircloth's passes and ran 17 yards to Anacostia's 28. Yocum passed to Teague for the score. Teague's attempted placement was wide.

W.-L. Defeats Gonzaga in 4th Period

For three quarters an underrated Gonzaga eleven played Washington-Lee to a standstill yesterday at Ballston Stadium, only to fall behind in the final period and lose a 13-6 decision. It was the second time in five games the Purple had tasted defeat.

Substitute Fullback French checked in the winning touchdown after a long drive. He carried the ball over from the 6-yard stripe on an off-tackle smash. Hoover's accurate placement made no difference in the outcome.

The Little Generals went into a lead a few minutes after the opening of the game when several fumbles had dropped Gonzaga back in the shadow of its own goal. Several smashes brought the ball to the 1-yard line from which point Arnaud plunged over.

Gonzaga came back to tie up the count. With Elmer Raba and Bobby Mess pacing the attack, the Purple reached W.-L.'s 10 and Ralph Simone, stellar back who has been forced out of Gonzaga's lineup due to an injured ankle, lugged the ball over. Again he went down on the sick list, however, when his ankle was re-twisted in the scramble.

The next touchdown came before the second stanza was a minute old. After one pass had picked up 9 yards to his own 44, Roosevelt's 135-pound Billy Hall went back to hurl again. Dan Magnuson, opposing tackle, intercepted on the 45 and paced the distance to the goal without reversing his field. Again Steiner converted.

The Riders managed to hold an indifferent Central scoreless in the third period. In the fourth they saw Hall's fumble recovered on their 39, and a series of two first downs, capped by a fancy pass, Steiner to Dick Farr, give Central its final 6 points. Dick Metzler, son of the former Central coach, was the goat of that last touchdown. Covering Farr over the goal, he slapped the ball into the air instead of down and the ever-alert wingman grabbed it as he fell. Steiner's placement was blocked by Bob Floyd.

Landon Prep And St. Paul Play 6-6 Tie

The second deadlock of the season for Landon Prep was registered yesterday on its home field when St. Paul, of Baltimore, rallied to earn a 6-6 tie. Landon opened its season with a scoreless tie with Woodrow Wilson.

What appeared to be the winning score fell to Landon's lads in the second period, after more than a quarter of see-saw battling, when Ben McKelway got away to a 34-yard touchdown dash. His efforts to carry the ball over for the extra point was futile.

With the game almost over, Halfback Lawrence, of the visitors, brought his team up even with the game's second touchdown. A short plunge turned the trick, and the chance to win with a conversion was nullified when the Landon line rushed the kicker. It wasn't the first serious threat of the invaders, however. In the third period a sustained march brought St. Paul to the Landon 5, but a fumble recovered by Bob Kephart, gave the hosts a chance to kick out.

Tilden and Lester Stoefen, Palm Springs, Calif., met defeat at the hands of Bill Sweissbuch, Los Angeles, and Bernie Coghlan, Santa Monica. The score, 2—6, 6—3, 2—6, 7—5, 6—4.

Ellsworth Vines, of Pasadena, former world's professional tennis titleholder, gained the final round by winning by default over Dick Skeen, of Hollywood.

Skeen, displaying foot blisters, asked for a postponement until tomorrow, but the tournament committee rejected the request on the ground the playing schedule had to be fulfilled.

Colonials Beat The Citadel Eleven, 13-6

Monchlovich Gallops 42 Yards to Score Winning Counter

the touchdown that upset Colonial Coach Reinhart's plans for winning under wraps to reveal nothing to two Georgetown scouts and a third from Clemson. It was a 32-yard flip from Halfback Graham Edwards to End Bob David, that somehow completely befuddled George Washington, and jolted the crowd out of its visions of an easy G. W. victory.

Suddenly and wholly this long pass changed the complexion of the game and also Reinhart's carefully laid strategy. No sooner than Jake Burrows had carried over The Citadel's seventh point by running his attempted place kick which had been blocked by Monchlovich did Reinhart send in the regulars he had withheld from the first line-up.

Into the game went Bob Nowaskey, star end, and Eddie Wilamoski, the Colonials' sophomore halfback "find," but though G. W. showed some improvement and Wilamoski made an 18-yard run from his own 6, it was afflicted with "fumblitis" when near scoring territory. And so the half ended with the lowly rated Citadel holding a 7-6 lead.

Several Good Performances

Though the George Washington players in general could scarcely have pleased their own mothers by their haphazard exhibition last night, several of them did turn in creditable performances.

In particular, Billy Richardson and Batson, by their consistent gains, Murphy Booth, by his blocking and alertness in intercepting a pass halted The Citadel's dying threats deep in Colonial territory, and linemen, Bob Nowaskey, Dan Douglas and Sunny Jones for all-around play were outstanding.

Edwards, whose booming punts kept G. W. in trouble in the first half, and whose passing was a constant threat, was easily the game's most brilliant figure. With any kind of blocking from his mates, Edwards might have turned the tide for the Cadets.

The statistics, while they clearly indicate George Washington's superiority on offense and defense, show also how ineffectual the Colonials were when yards gained meant touchdowns.

The scoring pass uncorked by the surprisingly smart little Citadel team was hardly a surprise to anyone except the Colonials, for it was the identical play which the visitors had tried unsuccessfully several times before and which had been missing only because the tosses were wild.

It came on the first play from scrimmage following Urick's fumble which was scooped up on the G. W. 32 by Capt. W. J. (Bill) Spain after several G. W. players did a bit of unscheduled juggling with the bounding ball. Edwards, a truly fine and versatile halfback, faded back and 5 to 10 yards to his left, sucking the Colonial line and secondaries over with him.

Browning Takes "Strike"

Then he stopped, wheeled quickly and shot his lethal pigskin bomb diagonally across the field to Browning who was running at top speed down the sidelines with his back toward the passer. At the precise moment, David turned his head slightly, looked over his shoulder and caught the "strike" without losing stride. Grady, at safety for G. W., was completely fooled by the play and allowed Browning to get about 3 yards in front of him. He realized his mistake as soon as the throw left Edwards' hands, but then it was too late.

Pierce-Drear Winner May Meet Overlin

Ken Overlin, ranking contender for middleweight honors is being sought by Promoter Goldie Ahearn to meet the winner of the Irish Eddie Pierce-Eddie Drear eight-round bout scheduled for the Arena Monday night.

The bout, which will bring together two up and coming young Irish scrappers, will be one of the highlights of an all-star card, which will feature two giant Negro battlers, Al Hart, of the Army War College, and the popular Jim Howell, hard-punching New York battler, in the eight-round main event.

In a special six-rounder, popular Joey Spangler, of Richmond, will battle Eddie Finazzo, Baltimore battler. Spangler dropped a much-disputed decision to Phil Furr on last week's card, and is anxious to make a good showing to be rematched with the local scrapper.

Three four-rounders will complete the card.

Guard Health Of Workers, Industry Told

National Program Would Pay, Selby Tells U. S. Association

By Stephen J. McDonough
Associated Press Science Writer.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 20.—Industrial leaders of the country were told today that they should inaugurate a national health program for their employes.

Dr. C. D. Selby, medical consultant for the General Motors Corporation, Detroit, Mich., in a report before the closing meeting of the American Public Health Association, declared that the health of employes is a direct concern of employers from an economic standpoint as well as the humanitarian.

"Relatively few manufacturing establishments have the benefit of expert guidance" and "a large proportion of the workers are employed in plants which are served by general practitioners who have little knowledge of occupational disease exposures and are not interested in them, but prefer only to treat injuries," he said.

However, if industrial concerns would carry out a program to take care of appendicitis, cancer, pneumonia, anemia and the communicable diseases as well as injuries, then many of the injuries might be prevented and the workman would be better able to perform his job, Dr. Selby declared.

"Back of this program, and contributing greatly to it, is an immense amount of research work" done by the United States Public Health Service, State bureaus of industrial hygiene, universities, and "a scattering of physicians" who have developed helpful knowledge in disease control for industries if they will only reach out and make use of it, he added.

Sewanee Beats Tennessee Tech For First Victory

Sewanee, Tenn., Oct. 20 (AP).—The University of the South won its first football victory of the season today, defeating Tennessee Tech's Golden Eagles, 9 to 7.

After an exchange of punts and two passes had placed the ball on Tech's 6-yard line in the third quarter, Waters, Sewanee back, booted a field goal.

In the fourth, Lyle of Sewanee smashed through center to the 1-yard line and then plunged over on the next play to score.

Tennessee Tech scored on a pass from Bridges to McDonald from the 6-yard stripe.

Chicago, Oct. 20.—Buyers shunned the wheat pit today because of the unsettled European situation, lower trend of securities and availability of large Canadian and Argentine surpluses.

Losses of a cent a bushel or more at times resulted although the market was under only light selling pressure, mostly from profit takers and shorts. Persistent drought in the Southwest tended to check selling.

Wheat closed ½@1 cent lower than yesterday, December 84⅛@84⅝, May 83¾@83⅞; corn ⅛@1¼ off, December 48¾@48⅞, May 51⅝@51¾; oats ½@¾ own; rye ¾@1 off; soy beans 1@2¼ lower, and lard 17@20 lower.

Drought Persists

Light rains and clouding skies were reported at some points in the hard winter wheat belt but there was virtually no relief in the drought that has persisted for two full months, except for rains October 8 and 9. No substantial moisture is in sight for over the week-end.

Reflecting the weather situation, July wheat showed some recovery power at times but many dealers expressed belief it is too early to buy on the basis of possible crop scares in the spring. Experts pointed out seeding can be accomplished in many sections through November under normal circumstances.

British buying of Canadian grain increased, although the amounts taken since the war have been small. Exporters disclosed 3,000,000 bushels of wheat were taken yesterday, bringing aggregate purchases the past two days to almost 5,000,000 bushels. In addition about 100,000 bushels of oats and some rye and barley have been sold to the United Kingdom. Foreign reports indicated the British and Canadian governments would attempt to check grain price fluctuations.

Cotton Futures Close 30 Cents To 50 Lower

New York, Oct. 20 (AP).—Cotton futures hit a soft spot on a straight-price road late today and dropped to final losses of 6 to 10 points. Increased hedge pressure near the close accounted for the relapse after the market held steady most of the day. Offerings were also influenced by easy outside markets.

The larger hedge offerings, brokers said, reflected the movement into sight during the past week of 701,000 bales, the largest thus far in the season. Many analysts said crop movement is now at its peak. Last year's top was reached a week earlier at 645,000 bales.

Also influencing hedge operations, brokers said, was a slackened demand by mills for Southern spot cotton. More cotton is also expected to be hedged than before. Larger supplies of lint also are going into certificated stocks as the Southern basis eases.

Stocks Close Irregularly Lower as War Developments Confuse Traders, but Aircraft Shares Again Reach New Highs

New York, Oct. 20.—Speculative cohorts ready to march at the signal denoting that the European war will be a finish affair, remained in their tents another day. Washington, taking the play from Berlin, issued the most belligerent statements. Limits of United States territorail waters are to be extended hundreds of miles to curb the activities of foreign submarines and surface craft. At a time when American relations with Japan appeared more satisfactory than at any time in the last two years, the National Administration gives indications of being hard-boiled with Tokyo. Arguments are multiplying for the creation of huge new defense forces on land, sea and in the air.

7,500 Block of Curtiss-Wright

Share prices moved irregularly lower in smaller dealings. Aircrafts were in the forefront again, reaching new all-time highs and monopolizing the tape, but most of them gave up small fractions before the close. Curtiss-Wright featured the opening on a block of 7,500 shares at 8, the year's high, ending ⅛ lower. North American Aviation was the day's leader on 21,500 shares, closing ¼ off. Douglas lost about 2 points on its recent gains.

Steels lost the most ground with coppers and motors also showing a definite trend to lower levels. In all three, the news was favorable to the buying side. Steel production at Pittsburgh, Youngstown, Birmingham and some other points was reported around the 10-year highs, at or close to practical capacity. British interests were said to be back in the market for a good round tonnage of semifinished products. Some weeks ago, English buyers and American sellers had been unable to get together on price.

Copper Demand

In coppers, reports were current of increased amounts of the metal going into domestic consumption, together with a well maintained foreign demand. In automotives, traders evidently paid more attention to the labor situation than to more constructive news. The French were stated to have ordered 2,000 trucks from Michigan companies with a further 2,500 on inquiry. Attendance at the motor show boomed and sales skyrocketed ahead of 1938 figures. A small recession in motor car output reflected the strike in Chrysler plants where production was off to 1,695 from 10,025 units. General Motors and Ford stepped up assemblies. Chrysler shares were off ⅞ and General Motors ⅜.

Dun's summary of retail and wholesale trade traced a strong buying movement during the last week, partly accounted for by seasonal needs. Tendency to increase inventories was noted in many line.

Railroad and industrial earnings could have promoted some real buying had traders not been so engrossed with Europe. Reports from a wide range of companies disclosed that, despite the talk of increased operating costs, most concerns have been able to increase earnings substantially through improved volume.

Utility Buying

There was some selective buying in special issues, and in utility preferred stocks. American and foreign power preferred issues made new highs and common shares in the power group were generally steady to higher. Associated Dry Goods preferred was at a new top, up 5. Thompson products, Thermoid preferred and Interchemical were at new highs for the year or longer. George Helme preferred, an inactive, was off 13¼ to a new low. Tobacco stocks were up a bit as increased cigarette production was reported for last month. Phillip Morris advancing 2. Building issues were ahead a trifle, led by Masonite which added 2 points. Coca Cola was up more than a point and smaller advances occurred in General Foods, International Nickel, Proctor & Gamble, Westinghouse Electric, McIntyre Porcupine and Kennecott. Farm shares were generally off a point or more. The 100-stock index was off 0.19 point net. Swiss francs were at a new low in foreign exchange transactions. Sterling was unchanged. Wheat and cotton markets were soft.

Government Bonds Advance

Strength in Treasury bonds and some sections of the foreign list was recorded today on the Stock Exchange and in the over-counter market for Government issues. Elsewhere price movements were mixed and within a narrow range.

The advance in treasuries was scored in more active dealings than on the preceding day. Gains ranged up to ¾ point on a wide number of issues. Turnover in Governments on the exchange was $1,156,000, against $1,105,000 on Thursday.

While foreign obligations claimed a little less attention, prices were distinctly stronger in a number of sections. Italian loans showed gains ranging up to more than 2 points. The Australian issues were up 1 or more, and Scandinavian bonds, Denmark, Norway and the City of Copenhagen had gains up to 3 points.

The average of 30 bonds was off 0.25 point on the day with total volumne on the exchange $7,665,000, against $7,788,000 a day earlier. Ten rails were down 0.09 point and the more speculative issues were down 0.36 point. Industrials were steady with a rise of 0.01 point and utilities advanced 0.20 in the averages.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 20.—Stock market traders were encouraged by the signing of the Allied-Turkish pact and while the usual week-end hesitancy was apparent, the undertone was firm. More interest was shown in issues neglected in the recent advance. Domestic rails were in brisk demand. Buying of foreign bonds increased. Oils weakened. Industrials stuck to a straight course. The gilt-edged market moved quietly.

Paris.—Trading quickened in the bourse again today, mostly at higher price levels. Profit-taking nipped rentes, which ended 25 to 70 centimes lower. Turkish loans were strong.

Amsterdam.—Rubber, sugar and shipping stocks stepped forward out of a narrow price groove in late bourse trade today. American issues were listless.

Liverpool.—Speculative support was attracted to cotton futures today by the latest Allied diplomatic maneuvers. Closing prices were up 1 to 3 points.

U. S. Federal Debt, $40.963 Billions, A New High Record

By the Associated Press

The Federal debt has jumped to a record high of $40,963,392,881, as the Treasury resumed borrowing to pay for its deficit.

The debt jumped $58,000,000 in one day principally because of the Treasury's sale of $150,000,000 of 91-day discount bills this week when only approximately $100,000,000 of similar obligations came due and needed replacement.

Secretary Morgenthau announced that the borrowing was intended to replenish the Treasury's cash working balance, now $2,265,000,000, and keep it at a size which would permit the Treasury to avoid financing in times when war news might make financing difficult.

The debt, which includes only the direct obligations of the Treasury, now is $523,860,470 higher than it was when the fiscal year began July 1 and about $2,500,000,000 higher than it was a year ago.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Examine the bidding of today's hand in which our friend Buffalo, W. Howard Woolworth, indulges in a little psychic skulduggery.

Uncle Bing's knavish bidding should have landed him in the muddle of a big goose egg, but like the saying: "The good bids die young," his bluff lived to win top score. He played three spades, undoubled, for a set of one trick and the loss of a mere 50 points. The adversaries can make five hearts for a vulnerable game.

At some tables North and South were allowed to save at four spades, which was, of course, doubled; even then the set was 300 points.

Here are Buffalo Bill's own comments on the bidding:

1. Somebody is going "Over the Hill" to the poorhouse!
2. Kum on. I got stuff. Right into the two-zone.
3. Cannot show weakness here. Wonder who will get fixed?
4. Prefer spades. Have shown my values.
5. Helpless.

In the play declarer lost three spades, one heart, one diamond.

Veterans Urge Army of 280,000

A full-strength peacetime Army of 280,000 men and a Navy "second to none" won the overwhelming support yesterday of the national executive committee of the Regular Veterans Association.

The committee also urged good conduct medals for all honorably discharged soldiers, upward revision of pay for both the Army and Navy and improved educational programs for service men.

MUTS AND JOLTS

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

Chapter 28

He saw Susan set the marble paperweight back on the table, lift her head again and look straight into Ellie's eyes.

He was astonished to have the sight agitate him as though he had but that instant realized whose photograph it was. His hands began to shake.

Light, casual, airy, the young voice asked, "Who's the invalid-looking girl in the oval frame?"

"That's Ellie. She was an invalid. She was Timothy's wife."

Wild scarlet flooded over the girl's face—a burning reflection of it instantly on that of the man who watched her. His very eyes were suffused with heat. His heart did not beat, clenched its fist and stood still while he suffocated.

"His . . . wife . . .?" Susan's startled voice faltered self-consciously over the word, was struck into silence by it. She put a hand up to her flaming cheek, and hung her head.

With a plunge Timothy's released pulse hammered gloriously at his temples, brought him up standing. He must have more air. He must be by himself. He could not stay here now—separated from her by the other two, by the convention which kept him from rushing to take her, netted in her blushes, like a dove alighting in his arms.

He was at the door. He had flung it open. 'Till he could see her alone . . . 'till he could tell her . . .

The sword-thrust of the zero night made him reach mechanically for a coat, a cap.

Aunt Lavinia was saying, "Ellie was a connection on his father's side. An orphan, she was, brought up by one of the clerical cousins. Very frail in health. I, myself, always thought that the Hulmes didn't . . ."

The door to the principal's house fell shut behind a young man who plunged down the steps and off at random anywhere his feet took him.

HE HAD rushed out of the house and gone tearing off, not knowing where, because the prosy presence of those others suffocated him. But even outside, all the tremendous vacancy of the winter night was not wide enough to contain the greatness that burst his heart.

He could have shouted full-voiced, have leaped and run, without matching the rush through his mind of hurrying exquisite pictures, memories of the past, and—as literally real—previsions of the future. They poured upon him as from a vast horn of plenty, so many that he could catch but a glimpse of one before another flashed before his eyes. He looked back at the months behind him and saw all his doubts brighten to rosy certainties in the reflection from that young blush—how could he have been so torpid as not to see, not to be sure long ago! He looked away from the past to that moment in the future—near, near, near to him now—the first instant after her return when he could see her alone!—when, sure of himself, sure of her, he would take her into his arms. As if he had hurled himself against something palpable he was halted by his astonishment to find that his arms, that all of him from head to foot, had already a fore-knowledge of that firm, yielding, pulsing young body. He stood stockstill for an instant, there in the snowy deserted road, clasped in her arms, and she in his. "Why, I am in love!" he cried exultantly. In love! He was astounded at what it is to be in love—Susan! Susan! Susan! To say her name loudly in the dark was life-giving, like breathing deeply, like eating, like drinking.

HE PLUNGED forward again, as if trying with long strides to keep pace with a fresh explosion of images bursting like rockets, burning bright against the dark—Susan's head on the pillow by his—Susan combing her cloudlike hair before his mirror—now they sat together in front of the hearth in her old home, his home, their home—and she was leaning not against Aunt Lavinia's knee, but his. He put out his hand gropingly in the dark and touched—at last!—the spun-silk softness of her hair, staggered, caught his breath, with a loud indrawn a-a-ah! and rushed forward faster yet, to fit action to his beating downpour of felicity—Susan—Susan—Susan—

All one man he was now, no longer a jangle of conscience-judge, acid self-satirist, and over-burdened mind trying to make the pinched heart and flesh forget their hunger. He was one now, complete, whole, ten times what he had ever been—a man. A man with his head above the stars—Susan—Susan—Susan—

As his hurrying feet pounded hard on the frozen earth, he was looking down on the stars, pitying them, scorning them for the poverty of their barren glitter compared to the vitality running like rivers of warm light all through him. He looked away from the stars, saw young brown hands that he loved, caught them, kissed them. He saw Susan, warm, alive, blushing, hanging her head, murmuring piteously, "His—wife!" and heard the other words in her heart, "Why, I thought I was to be his wife!" and cried aloud to her, "You are, darling. You are!" He looked forward from that Susan of but a moment ago and yet already of the past to the Susan of the future, saw her with a child, saw Susan smiling down at his child—and burst into a gloating shout of laughter to remember that he was the fool who had thought a teacher's students can take the place of children of his own. Then, startled to hear his voice loudly laughing and talking, and to feel himself swept with recurrent fits of trembling exaltation, he folded his lips shut and leaned hard to the steepness his feet were now climbing with so wild a haste that his laboring lungs all but gave way.

Yet around the turn at the top his breath came back, sweetly, softly, for Susan was there, calm, sunny, wifelike, waiting for him, slipping her hand into his, swinging along beside him, her every step a promise that he need never walk alone again. The hurricane in his mind and heart quieted to peace. After those jagged flashes of physical excitment piercing darkly to his body's core, it was a benediction to come out into blithe early-morning thoughts, singing and soaring above the future, no longer bleak but lying before him like a fertile sunlit plain, its happy highways open to him because there trod beside him close and dear— He tightened his hold on the young hand, and forgot that there was anything in the world but its staunch loyal clasp on his.

DIMLY AWARE of a barrier to his lunging forward swing, he slackened his frantic pace, floated slowly down from where he had been striding from star to star, and halted to look around, astonished to find his feet on the earth, to see above his head the lacy fretwork of winter branches.

He had been stopped on a country lane, just beyond a small low stone house. Close before him were wooden bars across the road. He had come to an ending. He knew that barway. His hands had set that barrier in place. He was standing before the old house where Susan had lived as a child, as a girl. His house now, her house, their home. His faithful knowing feet had brought him home. The five old maples spread between him and the stars the tracery of their myriad twigs. The little house, stout in the strength of the great stones in its walls, ignored the ferocity of the old. Its small window panes smiled in the starlight.

He had come back to the spot where he had stood with Susan, watching the first fire on his hearth, on their hearth, flickering in the twilight. Here was where he had the first of those senseless, self-tormenting fits of despair. He gloated over his vanished misery. He thought, "I will bring Susan out to this very spot and tell her 'here is where you told me—and I thought you meant—yet all the time'—" He turned to put an arm fondly around her shoulder.

But the Susan who had walked beside him, warm and dear, had slipped away and was back in the valley, looking up daunted at the picture in the oval frame, saying falteringly, "But I had thought I was to be his wife." He came to his senses now, enough to think that perhaps she might still be waiting there in the valley for him to come back—why, what must Aunt Lavinia and the two girls have thought of his silent disappearance?

He felt for a match, found that his hands, bare to the Arctic cold, were almost too stiff to bend, struck a match, looked at his watch and saw that it was long past 10. He could not believe his eyes. It was not possible! Why, five minutes ago he had been holding his breath in suspense while a young voice asked lightly, "And who is this in the oval frame?" He struck another match, looked at his watch again, shook it, held it to his ear, and heard its hard-headed realistic ticks, oblivious of stars, telling him to step back into prose, and to remember that he was five miles at least from the picture in the oval frame. He could not have walked it in less than an hour. It would take him at least an hour to return.

Only five miles! he thought wonderingly, putting the watch back in his pocket. He had been away on another planet. Only an hour ago? He had left time behind.

But, if an hour has passed, of course she has now gone home, she and the little sister to whom she so touchingly tries to play young mother. She must be in her bed by now—sweeter unpossess'd, have I said of her my sweetest? Not while she sleeps—

A crack like a revolver shot from one of the great maples startled him back to where he stood shuddering with cold. It was mad for any flesh-and-blood creature to stand still an instant on a night like this, when the very trees were being frozen to the heart. Blowing on his hands, he started back down the road at his fastest walk. It was not for Aunt Lavinia's sake that he was hurrying; she had never sat up for him, she would have gone to bed long before he could reach the house. Yet he walked fast and faster and presently broke into a swinging trot, striking his numbed feet with all his might on the hard-beaten snow of the road to whip up his blood, almost congealed by that unwitting stand under the maples. How long had he been there dreaming? Too long. But he knew what to do; as he ran he beat his arms across his chest and breathed deeply although the thousands of frost crystals in the air cut his lungs like little knives. The stars, very high above the tiny black figure running heavily down the winding white thread of the road, threw off malignantly from every frosty ray an unhuman killing cold.

But his body for all its soft vulnerability was too much for them. By the time he ran, panting hard, out on the highway of the valley, and, turning south, settled into a fast walk, every cell was glowing in a victory of self-created warmth that made a mock of the ice on the defeated frozen brook beside the road. His lungs, drawing in the dry, savagely cold air, turned it triumphantly into the moist jungle heat in which alone his body could survive, and sent it back to the winter outside in disdainful wreaths of steam.

BUT HE WAS TIRED! His legs ached. Not for years had he run so far. He would gladly have slackened to a saunter, loosening those taut tendons and muscles to ease, but he dared not. His only protection against the cold was rapid motion. Oh, well, he had not far to go now, not very far. He settled down to a plod. His mind, no longer needing to whip his body into speed, began to wander self-indulgently in dreams. Sober ones; he had run clean through those fires blazing in the night and had come out into the daylight. His thoughts now were of how they might rearrange the house after Susan was in it, giving Aunt Lavinia the two rooms on the south side of the second floor, taking down the partitions on the west side to make one large room out of the three; he thought of what they might do next summer, he would ask Downer to—no! he would not ask Downer anything, he would tell him that he must invite Aunt Lavinia to spend the summer at the seashore while he and Susan lived on the mountainside in the little stone house—walked knapsack on back through English lanes—bicycled in Normandy—camped out in the Rockies—drove through the Painted Desert—learned Spanish together in Mexico City. He thought, making an effort to keep his heavy feet from dragging, of how he must now change his will and leave the few poor thousands of his savings to Susan. His mind warned him, "But she will spend them all in pushing her Delia up," and he thought in utter fondness, "Let her! Let her do what she will with me and all that I am and have."

Like a revelation it came to him, "Why, when I open my closet door her dress will be hanging there!" Tears came in his eyes, the eyes which, wild with the glory of awakened senses, had looked in pitying scorn on the cold infertility of the stars ". . . her young, plain, dear and darling country dresses, pink and blue and gray; every thread perfumed with Susan sweetness." It did not occur to him as he dashed the tears away, grateful for them, that he need rejoice because he no longer cringed before the imp of self-mockery taunting him with "Sentimentality!" He had forgotten that he had ever so cringed. He was a free man, no slave to irony, free to bury his face in those clean, young cotton dresses and kiss them one by one.

But he was, in literal fact, extravagantly tired. How could he, without knowing it, have fled over all these mile-long miles? His feet had been wing-shod. They were weighted now with lead. Every mile was two. A knot in the muscles of his thighs began to pull together more tightly. One knee was stiffening, the knee which, 22 years ago, he had twisted in a fall on a tennis court and which had always been weaker than the other one. His mind, wandering vacantly at random in its fatigue, idly picked up "22" and set it beside the bright center of all his life ". . . 22 years ago—Susan 22 years ago—but she had been a very small child then, only beginning to talk and walk. When Timothy had been a grown man, almost married, Susan was . . ." His mind was in a panic, perceived that this was of all things just what it must never do, and hastily bade him think only of his exhaustion.
